Students Provide Fresh Perspective on School Safety

MHS students are visiting schools around the district to provide a fresh look at school safety initiatives at Mooresville Schools.

The Safety Audit Team of MHS seniors spent a day learning from administrators and emergency responders about different safety protocols from fire drills to playground equipment safety.

The students then used their knowledge to spend a day at a school interviewing students and staff members and observing the school's procedures. The program was named by the Indiana Department of Education as a Best Practice for safety in the state.

"This safety audit is another tool for us to continuously monitor and work to improve safety procedures in our schools," said Superintendent Randy Taylor. "Our students provide a different perspective that helps us strengthen our safety activities."

The students will provide each principal with feedback about their observations around the schools to help provide insight on various areas of safety.

Safety Director Rex Cook talks with MHS students about the safety audit process in preparation for their school visits.
