Mooreville Programs Receive National, State Recognition

Mooreville Schools' administrators and teachers have been recognized in state and national forums recently. Mooreville's efforts and innovative programs in school safety and career education have earned the district respect among educational peers in Indiana and beyond.

Superintendent Randy Taylor was invited to present at a national Superintendent's Summit for the District Administration Leadership Institute. He was tapped to co-host a discussion on school safety best practices.

Assistant Superintendent Dr. Jake Allen was part of a panel at Indiana University on the role of the teacher in school safety. Dr. Allen, who is a member of the IU School of Education Alumni Board, spoke with students in the IU school of education about their important role in the lives of students.

Learning Every Day

Teachers across the district found a way to weave the Halloween holiday into lessons.

At PHMS, teachers dressed as idioms (phrases which don't really mean what their words imply) for students to guess. See the video explanation of their creative costumes.

At North Madison, first graders dissected pumpkins, learned the pumpkin life cycle, and counted pumpkin seeds.

Neil Armstrong second graders learned about caves, caving and bats from guest speaker Tymme Laun, who also brought the "squeeze box" to have each child experience crawling through a tight place.
