Let me give you another secret. This is the three x fast content freedom system. Proven works great. Now listen, you never need to answer alone. You can use free stock images. I like to use Unsplash, but there are plenty of free stock image websites that you don't have to even give credit to people if you don't want to, but free stock images, people love images on Quora. When you can use images, you really truly get an unfair advantage compared to everyone else. You can also point to your previous answers and other videos inside of the one minute free traffic training. You'll also see that you're building an empire and cross pollinating while you can point to previous answers and point to other assets that you have set up either on Facebook or other blog posts perhaps that you've written on the topic. So always exploit what you've already done.

Always, you know, utilize the work and the effort you've put in. You can use Google news for quick ideas that are fresh and relevant and crazy headlines or particular people, individuals who are maybe in politics and polarize people. In other cases. Maybe it, you know, movie stars and celebrities. You can utilize Google news for that or even just data, right? So if it's business related, you can very often find news about companies and stocks and what's happening in the, in the market, so to speak. So Google news is your friend for a fresh and relevant content. You can also use Google zeit, geist and Google trends to see what's hot right now. You don't have to just come up with an answer out of the blue or from your, you know, the, the deep well of creativity. Now if you can do that, fantastic.

But if you're stuck Google zeitgeists in Google trends, Google News, these are your friends. You can also use Google itself. You can do a search on Google and kind of noodle on ideas. But I'm sure you've seen this when you start to search for things on Google, there's a dropdown and they give you suggestions on, you know, the keyword phrases or the, the, the, the, the searches that you should be doing. Use Google search itself to get ideas for how to answer questions that people have, right? You can even use public domain. And I love public domain. You can use public domain, uh, again and again and again. It's really powerful. It allows you to tap into content that has already proven. And just a really quick shout out to my good friend Tony Leidig, he has excellent training on public domain. Can't recommend a Tony enough.

Here's just a little, little peek, a little glimpse into what Tony provides and his various trainings. Um, these are book resource sites. There are many, many other resources that 20 makes available. You can see archive or you've got project Gutenberg Hathi Trust The New York public library, a European, also the digital public library of America. And there are, there are so many public domain resources available. You can get entire books of content that you can use for free. So it's just really incredible. So little inside tip there that you can utilize public domain to augment the answers that you're already providing over on Quora to drive free traffic. It's a beautiful thing. I'll see you in the next training.
