From the Youth Guy,

Have you ever had a moment that shook you to your very core? That you could feel reverberating in every fiber of your being. A moment so profound you didn't know how to process it. A moment when the spirit of God was so thick, so tangible, so at work inside you and around you. The first time I had a moment like I'm describing is the day I turned my heart back to Christ. This past week serving the people of Nicaragua was filled with those moments. These moments came in the most unexpected times and places and blessed me in ways I still can't unpack and explain.

One such moment came as lunch time approached Monday. It was our first day out in the village. The lines for medical and dental care were long. It was hot and humid, every person covered in a sweat that made your clothes stick. And everyone was hungry, some more than others. People had walked for hours to receive medical care and would spend 3-4 hours getting through all the lines to receive care, then walk for hours to get home. So they were hungry with a long way to go before they would eat. Every day we would make 20 gallons of ramen and hand out about 400 cups at lunch to the people.

It was mass chaos, and I loved every minute of it. Feeding the hungry is humbling, and brought me to the core of Christianity. Serving People.

"Whoever receives one such child in my name receives me, and whoever receives me, receives not me but him who sent me." Mark 9:37

In that moment, amidst the pandemonium, I wondered how the disciples must have felt with five loaves of bread and 2 fish trying to form a single file line to feed the 5000. What must the disciples have thought? Surely the people wondered when the food would run out. The need for a meal. The smiles when they received their cup of ramen. The fear that we might run out before they got a cup. The joy I felt from serving a simple meal to a hungry child.

Join me as I try to get away from my phone, Facebook, and schedule this week and love someone I don't know unconditionally, serve them simply, and allow the Spirit to move.
