New Study Announced—'Previews to Coming Attractions'

The unity of the Bible testifies to its divine authorship. Evidence of this is seen in various aspects and elements of Old Testament worship, as well as people, events, ceremonies and institutions. They foreshadow or prefigure something of greater significance that comes in the New Testament. The Old Testament illustration is called a "type." Its New Testament fulfillment is called its "antitype" (or "shadow"). Reese explains that "types are previews of coming attractions."

This is a fascinating study that opens new vistas of Bible understanding and broadens the horizon for the student who wants to see the beauty of the Bible's unity and divine inspiration. The tabernacle is an example, the study of which forms the basis for understanding many aspects of God's nature and of a Christian's life and worship.

"In the letter to the Colossians (2:17) Paul noted that many of the institutions and commands revealed under the Law of Moses were, 'things which are a mere shadow of what is to come; but the substance belongs to Christ.' The same thrust is found in Hebrews 10:1 'For the Law, since it has only a shadow of the good things to come and not the very form of things.' In reference to the tabernacle in the Old Testament, the Hebrew writer notes (8:5) that the Levitical priests served 'a copy and shadow of the heavenly things.'" (quoted by Wayne Jackson)

This study is being offered in room 152. Contact Bruce Wolf or Gene McCoy for more information. Ask Gail Hinds for a personal testimony regarding the value of this study.
