HUNGER RELIEF

Nearly 50 million Americans, or nearly one in six, live in "food insecure households," according to Feeding America, a nationwide network of two hundred food banks.

Southern Baptists staff and stock thousands of local church and communitywide faith-based hunger ministries across the nation. Some have in-house food pantries. Some cooperate with community food banks. Some work with local ministries or agencies. Some provide after-school meals. Some place food in school children's backpacks for the weekend. Some assist with community gardens.

In addition, the Southern Baptist Convention created a fund, Global Hunger Relief (GHR), through which Baptists (and others) can contribute to hunger needs in North America and around the world. Gifts to GHR annually fund numerous hunger projects, with 80 percent going to overseas hunger needs, administered through the International Mission Board, and 20 percent going to North American hunger needs, administered through the North American Mission Board (NAMB). Because of Southern Baptists' giving through the Cooperative Program, 100 percent of GHR funds help relieve hunger, with none used for administrative costs.
