

GOT MILK MONEY?

Everybody's complaining about the price of a gallon of gasoline these days. Bought a gallon of milk lately? I'm just glad my car doesn't run on milk. If you're like my wife, though, it's no big deal because she rarely drinks milk anyway. She even refuses to tilt her cereal bowl up and drink the sugary liquid down, wiping off that all too familiar white mustache. What's this world coming to?

They tell us the price of milk is influenced by the price of gasoline. Just hope my bottled water doesn't go through the roof too. Of well, there's always Coke.

What's all this going to do to our giving to the church? Hope our 10% mushrooms into 11 or 12, but I have a feeling it's going to go the other way. Perhaps we should start running sales and advertise 8 or 9 percent giving for qualified givers. Maybe we should ask people to rent their pew and buy their own hymnal. Someone said the Bible says God owns the cattle on a thousand hills, maybe we should ask him to sell a few of them.

Yes the future looks different. I probably won't buy that gas guzzling monster truck I've been holding out for. Might even have to start drinking 1% milk or even "no percent" milk.

One thing's the same, though. God! We can count on him when we are flush with milk and when the milk runs dry. Got milk money? Better. Got God!
