

WHAT MOTHERS THINK

Twelve social science researches who formed the Mother's Council and Motherhood Project surveyed over 2000 mothers who had children under the age of 18 and discovered that they derive satisfaction from being a mother.

They found that mothers didn't emphasize the stress and strain of motherhood, instead 97% of the women surveyed said they were "'very' or 'somewhat' satisfied" with issues related to be a mother. 93% said "the love they feel for their children is unlike any love they've ever experienced." and 81% consider motherhood as "the most important thing they do."

Even with this personal satisfaction, 48% said they feel appreciated "most or all of the time."
