

Seasons Come and Seasons Go

It's true that "to everything there is a season." This applies not only to weather, spring planting/fall harvesting, but also to our lives.

There are clearly seasons to our working lives: times when we're busy, and times when it seems nothing's happening at all. It's those lulls between that allow us to catch up. Witness the frenetic maintenance on the Beach the last few weeks.

We're in one of these slow lane/personal seasons just now. Between vaccination and open doors; between a resurgence of the virus and the disappearance of the virus. We can look at the time as an opportunity to do some good; to explore a long-forgotten dream; to train for a marathon, or just the Bridge Run when it's finally safe to be around huge crowds.

The writer of Ecclesiastes tells us God appointed a time and "a season for every activity under heaven."

Why God created seasons is a mystery, but it seems He likes contrasts. The Bible is full of examples: birth and death, sadness and joy, good and bad times. The one constant is that He is always with us through every season of our lives. And, when life seems out of control, God is not.

Redeemer Fellowship invites you to join us Sundays at 10:00 a.m. at the Edisto Beach Civic Center because no matter what season of life you're experiencing, you'll learn how to walk with Him in faith in all seasons.
