Time Demands of Division I Women's Basketball Players

October 2009

Study Overview

- GOALS – Growth, Opportunities, Aspirations and Learning of Students in college
  - 21,000 current student-athletes at 627 Division I, II and III schools.
  - 66% of Division I institutions participated. Most surveyed student-athletes on 1 to 3 teams.
  - Surveyed about their college academic, athletic, and social experiences; time demands; team and campus climate; health and well-being; post-college aspirations.

Definitions

- Athletic Hours: Sum of hours reported on physical (practicing, training, competing, training room, etc.) and non-physical (meetings, team functions, film study, etc.) activities related to competing in their sport.
- Academic Hours: Sum of hours reported attending class activities (including labs, discussion groups, etc.) and studying or academic work done outside of class.
- Students self-reported hours spent in these activities and others on their typical in-season weekday and typical in-season weekend.
- 1987-88 AIR study asked students to estimate weekly time spent on various activities in-season and out-of-season. The AIR study used less detailed prompts on what might constitute time spent in athletic activities.
- We expect some degree of error involved with a self-reported retrospective assessment of time commitments. However, we generally expect that any inconsistencies will be present across sport, division, etc. Therefore, between-sport or between-division comparisons should give us a good relative understanding of student-athlete time commitments.
- Students were not asked to do any accounting toward the 20-hour rule.

NCAA DIVISION I WOMEN'S BASKETBALL ISSUES COMMITTEE PROPOSED
ACADEMIC AND ATHLETIC DEVELOPMENT MODEL

Background:

In May 2008, the NCAA Division I Women's Basketball Issues Committee received an update on the Academic Performance Program (APR). The APR data did not indicate that women's basketball is in a state of academic crisis. However, the APR in women's basketball is the lowest of all women's sport. The goals should be twofold: to provide women's basketball student-athletes with exemplary educational and intercollegiate experiences (Bylaw 23.01.1). This includes enhancing the ability of student-athletes to earn four-year degrees and their physical well-being and development (Bylaw 2.2). For the long-term well-being of the game and for the betterment of its student-athletes, the committee examined ways to improve the academic performance of women's basketball student-athletes and to improve the overall academic culture before major problems arise.

Key research findings demonstrate the positive impact of summer credit hours earned on the achievement of long term academic success. Data also indicates the impact of "transferring" on long-term academic success.

The committee noted the following key data information:

1. While many sports are showing positive APR trends, women's basketball appears to be declining in academic performance. While four-year APR data for other sports has increased, this data for women's basketball has remained "flat." In the most recent APR data released, women's basketball APR average decreased by three points.
2. Eligibility rates in baseball and men's basketball have increased substantially, while the same rate in women's basketball has declined. Data indicates a sharp decrease in the number of baseball and men's basketball student-athletes who left institutions academically ineligible and did not return in the subsequent term (i.e., "0/2"). There has been an increase in the number of "0/2's" in women's basketball.
3. There has been an increase in the number of 2-4 transfers in women's basketball, while the overall number of these transfers has decreased.
4. APR, retention and eligibility rates are declining.
5. The average Grade Point Average (GPA) data appears to have decreased slightly over the past three years.
6. "0/2" rates are now above the overall average and are consistent with men's baseball data. The rate of "2-4 and 4-4" transfers in women's basketball is significantly higher than those rates in other women's sports. Two-year transfers are more likely to become 0/2 departures than non-transfers.

7. Freshman GPA's and SAT scores appear to have slightly declined since 2005-06.
8. Semester eligibility rates are higher than in men's basketball, but have slightly declined in 2007-08.
9. The total summer credit hours accumulated by student-athletes correlates with the total credits earned and progress toward degree in years one through three. This effect holds even after controlling for the student-athletes' academic background and the resource level of the institution.
10. The summer credit effect appears as strong or stronger as high school academic preparation in predicting progress toward degree.
11. During the 2007-08 academic year, 57.3% of incoming freshmen attended summer school, 48.3% of two year transfer students attended summer school and 48.8% of four year transfer students attended summer school.
12. Division I women's basketball student-athletes report spending 36 hours per week on athletics in-season. They also report spending more time away from campus and more missed class in-season than other women's sports.
13. More Division I women's basketball student-athletes than any other sport group reported that their coaches were a significant social and/or emotional source of support while in college.

Given the aforementioned women's basketball student-athlete profile, a student-athlete's socioeconomic background may play an important role in the successful transition into college. For many, the time with their coaches and teammates during the summer positively impacts the student-athlete's acclimation process. The committee discussed the importance for incoming student-athletes' acclimation to the collegiate environment in order to formulate relationships with teammates and to become familiar with their coaches. The committee noted the role basketball plays in allowing these students to achieve a sense of balance and the role and responsibility that the team and coach has in assisting incoming student-athletes in this transition phase.

Guiding Principles:

The Division I Women's Basketball Issues Committee has developed the following guiding principles which will govern its review of the academic performance of women's basketball student-athletes. Any identified changes should: [Note: In next version-anchor guiding principles to NCAA Article 2]

1. Result in improved academic performance and academic culture.
2. Contribute to the long term well-being and development of student-athletes.
3. Increase the potential of improved academic performance and academic culture.
4. Enhance the coach and student-athlete relationship.
5. Assist with the academic and athletic acclimation of incoming student-athletes into the collegiate environment.
6. Recognize the role basketball plays in allowing student-athletes to achieve a sense of balance.

Recommendation:

The Division I Women's Basketball Issues Committee submits the proposed model and welcomes feedback, input and dialogue among constituent groups throughout the NCAA membership and the women's basketball community.

Incoming Freshmen and Transfer Division I Women's Basketball Student-Athletes – Summer School Attendance.

1. All incoming freshman and transfer Division I women's basketball student-athletes, who have signed financial aid agreements to receive athletically related financial aid for the ensuing regular academic year, shall be required to attend the institution's summer term prior to initial full-time enrollment. Such student-athletes shall be provided financial aid and enroll in a minimum of six credit hours and satisfactorily complete a minimum of three hours of acceptable academic degree credit as a prerequisite for eligibility in the fall term.
2. Such student-athletes would be permitted to engage in one hour of countable athletically related activities per week, up to a maximum of 10 total hours, during the time the student-athletes are enrolled in the summer term.

- Consistent with the provisions of Bylaw 13.11.3.9, such student-athletes may continue to engage in voluntary summer workouts conducted by the institution's strength and conditioning coach with department-wide duties and may receive workout apparel (on an issuance and retrieval basis).
3. Institutions must provide such student-athletes study skills/life skills education during the summer session.

Continuing Division I Women's Basketball Student-Athletes.

The current legislation relating to summer school attendance (e.g., financial aid, credit-hour requirement) for continuing student-athletes would remain the same. Consistent with the provisions of NCAA Bylaw 13.11.3.9, such student-athletes may continue to engage in voluntary summer workouts conducted by the institution's strength and conditioning coach with department-wide duties and may receive workout apparel (on an issuance and retrieval basis).

Exceptions and Waivers.

The committee agreed that there should be exceptions and a waiver process available to incoming student-athletes.

1. An exception would be provided to those institutions that do not offer summer school courses for the general student body. However, such institutions would not be permitted to participate in the summer countable athletically related activities component. Further, institutions that offer summer courses, but do not offer athletically related financial aid (e.g., award only need-based aid), would have two options:
  - a. To use the previously noted exception applicable to institutions that do not offer summer courses to the general student body. Institutions electing to use this option would not be required to award summer financial aid, but also would be prohibited from participation in summer countable athletically related activities.
  - b. Institutions electing to participate in the athletics activities portion of the model would be subject to the mandatory summer aid requirement for those student-athletes who qualify for nonathletically related financial aid to attend the summer session. The summer countable athletically related activities provisions of this model would be applicable to those student-athletes enrolled in the requisite minimum number of hours of acceptable degree credit who are receiving nonathletically related financial assistance covering their own cost of summer school.

2. A waiver from the application of the mandatory attendance requirements for incoming student-athletes would be available when unique circumstances preclude an incoming student-athlete from attending summer school. A student-athlete receiving a waiver of the mandatory attendance requirement would not be permitted to engage in summer countable athletically related activities.

Rationale:

(We need to draft a section explaining why this recommendation is appropriate – make our case).

Additional Considerations:

The Division I Women's Basketball Issues Committee will continue its work on the proposed Academic and Athletic Development Model. The committee will spend additional time examining the impact of the current playing and practice season model on the academic performance of women's basketball student-athletes. The committee will further explore the impact of the act of transferring on the academic performance of women's basketball student-athletes and engage in a dialogue with the NCAA Division I Academic Cabinet in this regard. Additionally, the committee representatives are engaged in the review of legislative proposals and concepts that will impact playing and practice seasons and competition opportunities. Committee representatives are involved in a variety of future strategies discussions relative to the overall "state of the game" and the establishment of priorities that will serve as growth catalysts for the game.

Timeline:

Given the important place women's basketball holds in the overall landscape of Division I and the developing concern regarding the academic performance of women's basketball student-athletes, the committee believes it is imperative to solicit feedback and comments from the Division I membership. The committee will solicit feedback through early, 2010 and seek to finalize its proposal in spring 2010 and ask the NCAA Division I Championships/Sports Management Cabinet to sponsor proposed legislative changes for the 2010-11 legislative cycle.
