24-HOUR FILMING EVENT TO FOCUS ON DETROIT

ONE DAY IN DETROIT to inspire hundreds of films on April 26.

DETROIT, 11 March 2014 - The world's largest media collaboration, ONE DAY ON EARTH, is launching a new project to document the topic of 'cities' this April 26th. One-day filming events will take place in 11 major US metro areas, including Detroit. Working with hundreds of partner organizations across the United States, including creative communities, nonprofits, and municipal offices in Detroit, the project will investigate 10 questions for a 24-hour filming campaign called YOUR DAY. YOUR CITY. YOUR FUTURE. The goal is to inspire citizens to document the issues and culture that will define their city for the next 20 years.

Questions, such as, "Who is your city not serving?" and "What are the solutions that your city needs to implement?" are balanced with, "What do you love about your city?" and "What is the best thing happening in your city today?"

While the project is launching in 11 US metro areas this month, there are plans to expand the initiative to additional cities, both domestically and abroad later in the year. The social platform, www.YourDayYourCity.org serves as a gateway for all the cities and a space where participants can get involved with fellow collaborators.

Participants in the project will connect with their fellow filmmakers and upload their films to www.OneDayInDetroit.org where their submissions will create an accessible geo-tagged archive showcasing all media created that day. The project producers are also working directly with local PBS affiliates and public broadcasters to share a TV series, investigating the future of American cities.

The project is supported by a coalition of national and local foundations, including the Ford Foundation and the Surdna Foundation and is hosted in partnership with the video-sharing platform Vimeo.
