While I am by no means a connoisseur of art, I can appreciate the hard work that goes into creating the various works of art that are on display in various museums around the world. In some cases, I find the works to be pretty. Van Gogh's "Starry, Starry Night" is one of my favorites. At the same time, I don't understand the strange work of abstract artists like Picasso, or the fascination with some of Da Vinci's works like the Mona Lisa. Yet whether I am intrigued by the artwork itself or not matters little. The time and effort that was put into each of these works is impressive.

Not only impressive, but also in it I find something admirable and worthy of imitation as a Christian. If you think about it, when each of us comes to Christ our souls and our lives are cleansed and what remains is a blank canvas. Each one of us has a fresh start where we can begin working on putting together the masterpiece that God sees in each one of us, having been created in His image. What a shame it would be if we took that clean, blank canvas and tossed it back into the muck and the mud that it had been bought from and brought out of.

In God's word we have a guide for how to put that masterpiece together. We are taught what bearing good fruits looks like, encouraged to study and show ourselves approved, and reminded that fellowship with Christ means any mistakes in the painting of our lives that we might make are erased by His blood, continually. Still, there is work we must do. Let us make sure we are working until He comes again. Amen?
