Tutors will:

- Provide processes, not solutions - students will arrive at answers on their own.
- Encourage students to guide the session, ask questions, and be independent learners.
- Serve as a supplement to the learning that occurs in the classroom - never as a replacement.
- Actively listen to the students they work with.
- Respect diverse backgrounds, perspectives, and learning styles.
- Maintain knowledge of the subjects they tutor.

Tutors will not:

- Complete work for students.
- Provide answers without involving students in the process to arrive at the answer.
- Teach the coursework. Tutors can provide clarification and practice with a concept, but are not the primary source for learning the material.
- Engage in conversations about faculty members or quality of courses.
- Discuss current or potential grades with students.
