

As you all know, February is the month we honor the achievements of Black leaders and their history. As President of MARILN, I would like to share a story about a fantastic nursing leader. Her name is Mary Elizabeth Carnegie, nurse, leader, dean, and civil rights activist.

Mary Elizabeth Carnegie, ground-breaking nurse, educator, author, champion of the cause of African American nurses, and longtime member of AAHN died at the age of 91 at her home in Chevy Chase on February 20, 2008. We remember her fondly as a tireless leader in obtaining quality education and full recognition for the contributions of African American nurses. She graciously served as a mentor to generations of African American nurse leaders. In any open discussion of history presentations, she unfailingly alerted the audience to what African American nurses were doing in the area under discussion. She actively participated in AAHN up to the last year of her life, attending the 2007 AAHN Conference.

To read more, click the link below

<https://www.aahn.org/carnegie>

NLN Leading Edge series developed a podcast in her honor... please enjoy

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Aleosrznwpo>

Sincerely

Cheryl Williams