Greetings!

NHNA is very proud to have a hand in producing this video. There are so many perspectives in which we as nurses contribute to calming and informing the public. This is just one. Let’s continue to collaborate across all nursing specialties as one voice. New Hampshire needs us. Take pride, utilize your leadership skills and reach out to us if we can help at office@nhnurses.org.

We Want to Hear from You!

Relieving the stresses that NH nurses face is a serious topic that we must address. Writing your story may help you re-frame the event and provide meaningful insight into your journey through this difficult time.

People connect around stories. When we share a story, we are offering a piece of ourselves, and this not only releases our stress but it also contributes to the readers well-being when they identify with your story.

Over the weeks ahead, we would like to able to publish your stories, either by social media or in NH Nursing News. We’re sure that many of you are already writing journals. Please share your thoughts -- Tell Us YOUR Story

EMAIL your story to office@nhnurses.org
Hope Huddles

As a float nurse, Emily Fawcett saw the impact that the surge in COVID-19 patients had on its ER staff. Recognizing that the staff did not have the opportunity to learn the outcomes of the patients they sent intubated to the ICU, she launched an initiative that promises to provide positivity to her fellow front-line health care workers — something she calls “Hope Huddles.”

Now every ER shift at New York City’s Lennox Hill hospital begins with Hope Huddles, bringing those positive patient stories back to where their hospital journey began.

“Spreading a little hope is everything to the doctors and nurses right now. We are really desperately trying to see the light at the end of this tunnel.” Fawcett said.