

Club Discontinues

Lake Knowles Tree

WINTER PARK — Lake Knowles will be without a Christmas tree this year, but the spirit will still live in the hearts of the many people who made the special trip to see the lighter Yuletide tree, according to a spokesman for the Red Pepper Garden Club.

Each year, a tree decorated with metal disks reflecting the twilight was erected on Lake Knowles, but the club, which donated the tree to the community, decided to discontinue the practice for the duration of the energy crisis.

"We DID all the decorating while it was still on shore," Cavalero explained. "Then Fleet came with us when we towed it out into the middle."

"He had put the anchor in place years ago, and has the ability to go straight to it. But we'll have to put some kind of a marker out there."

Cavalero and his brother, David, took over the project this year from the Red Pepper Garden Club at the insistence of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Rothstein, members of the club.

"And being able to use scuba gear sure was a help," Mike Cavalero Jr. said. "Luckily we had Fleet Peoples with us to show us where to anchor it and the water was warm."

WINTER PARK — Water temperature rather than electricity was the concern of the Cavalero brothers when they towed the Lake Knowles Christmas tree into the center of the lake.

By JODY FELTUS
Correspondent

Lake Knowles Christmas Tree Towed Out To Center Of Lake

The tree rests on a dolly which floats on two 50-gallon drums. When the tree is anchored in place, the special cable wiring is brought back to shore.

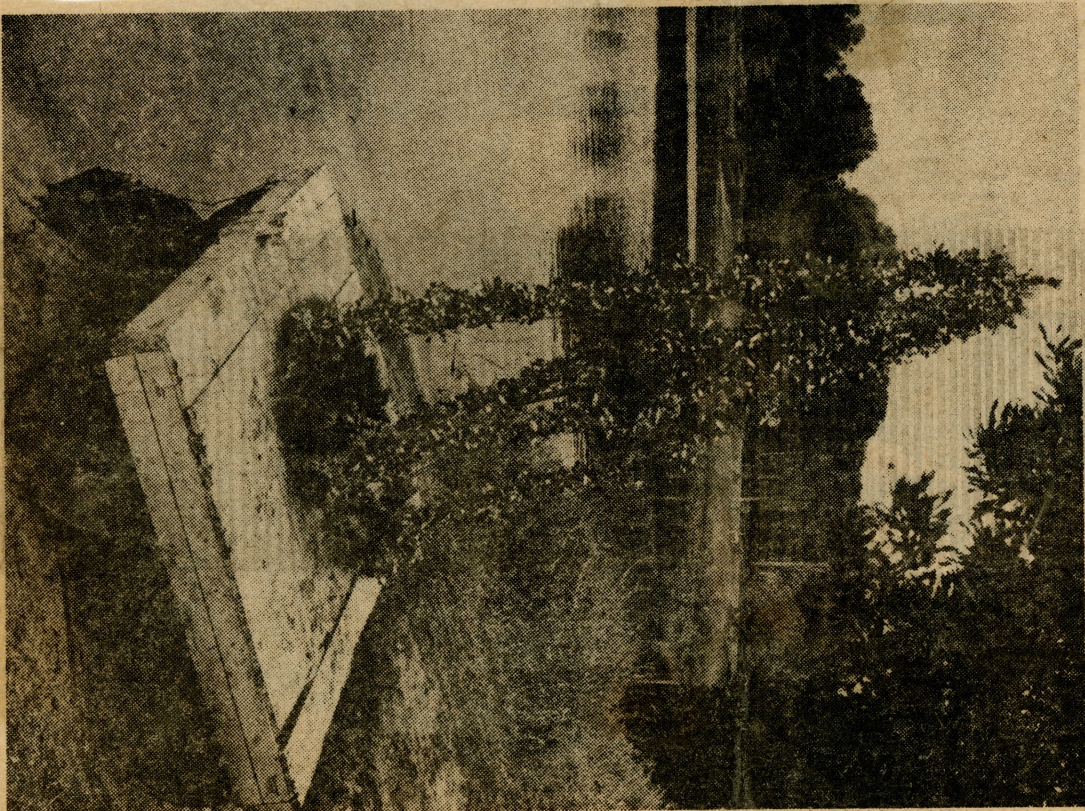

"FLORIDA POWER hooks it into a pole set up for taking care of the tree lighting. They don't plug it in until we are out of the water. I guess if there were some kind of problem it could be a hair-raising experience," he added.

According to Cavalero, the tree comes on automatically with the street lights around the lake at dusk.

The Cavaleros also had to rebuild the dolly this year because of wear and tear during the many years of warm and cold water temperatures.

"WE HAD to scrounge around for lumber," he said. "We're hoping next year we can get a few contributions and do a better job. I live in a 50-year-old house and fortunately know carpentry."

Cavalero said he and his brother took on the job willingly because they are lakefront residents. He added it will probably be "their" project in the coming years.

(Sentinel Star Photo by Ray Powell)

LAKE KNOWLES CHRISTMAS TREE

Almost ready for its annual trek into the lake