

City of Winter Park
Lake Virginia

Be decisive, let's study it — over and over

Orlando Sentinel, August 19, 1988

And the studies pile up at the bottom of Lake Virginia. Everybody knows the water in the Winter Park Chain of Lakes is getting murky. But what surprises some members of the city commission is that the city still does not know why. "We are studying and studying and studying our lakes," Mayor David Johnston complained at a recent budget workshop. Johnston urged that the city do something — anything — to stop the decline of Winter Park's waterways. But the task isn't so easy. Sure, the mayor and his fellow commissioners took decisive action, tentatively agreeing to spend $500,000 on the lakes next year. But what programs to spend the money on? As soon as two more studies are completed, the commissioners will know...

Johnston

still does not know why. "We are studying and studying and studying our lakes," Mayor David Johnston complained at a recent budget workshop. Johnston urged that the city do something — anything — to stop the decline of Winter Park's waterways. But the task isn't so easy. Sure, the

Orlando Sentinel, August 19, 1988