AZ health exchange hangs in balance

Luige del Puerto
luige.delpuerto@azcapitoltimes.com

By upholding the federal health care law, the U.S. Supreme Court cleared the way for states to establish their own health insurance exchanges — web portals where individuals and small businesses can purchase health plans.

But while the justices erased any legal ambiguity surrounding the health care overhaul, legislative leaders and other influential lawmakers in Arizona remain highly critical of the law — and they're fiercely resisting the idea of a locally run exchange, which is also meant to seamlessly integrate with Medicaid enrollment.

Already, House Speaker Andy Tobin said his preference is to wait until the results of the November presidential election, confident that if Republican Mitt Romney wins, the health care law will be repealed.

But waiting until November means Arizona could lose out on its ability to operate its own exchange in 2014, when the law requires the exchanges to be operational.

And for many, including the insurance industry here, that's too big of a risk.

Gov. Jan Brewer's office has for months been designing and planning for a state-run exchange.

The office has already spent $30 million in federal grant money on the program, strongly indicating that Brewer will tell the Obama administration late this year that Arizona will operate the program rather than defer to the federal government.

Medicaid expansion appears unlikely after Supreme Court ruling

Jeremy Duda

If the feds can't force Arizona to move forward with the massive Medicaid expansion, it's a near certainty the Republican-led Legislature won't do it for them.

Though the U.S. Supreme Court upheld the core of President Barack Obama's Affordable Care Act, it ruled that the federal government couldn't force states to expand health care for the poor by threatening to take away other Medicaid funding.

Chief Justice John Roberts said the federal government can't put a "gun to the head" of states that refuse to expand coverage by threatening to take away Medicaid funding, as the Affordable Care Act would have done.

And legislative Republicans, who have spent the past several years making deep budget cuts to deal with the ongoing fiscal crisis, are largely content to opt out, now that there's no mandate.

"How are we going to expand it if we don't have the money to pay for it?" said Senate President Steve Pierce. "We made some real hard decisions that were the right decisions at the right time. If we were flush with money we could revisit some of that, but we're not."

Even with the extra federal funding the Affordable Care Act provides for the expansion, the expansion would cost too much in the long run, said Pierce, R-Prescott.

"I'm not going to get sucked in on that one again. 'Hey, we'll help you out now.' (But) somebody's going to have to pay for it sooner or later," he said.

Campaign finance round-up of 8 key legislative races

LUIGE DEL PUERTO AND GARY GRADO
luige.delpuerto@azcapitoltimes.com, gary.grado@azcapitoltimes.com

Here's a look at the fundraising and campaign-spending results for candidates in eight legislative districts through the first five months of the year.

LEGISLATIVE DISTRICT 25 SENATE

Mesa businessman Bob Worsley has far outraised his primary opponent, former Senate President Russell Pearce, taking in about $67,000 in contributions through May 31.

Pearce, meanwhile, collected a mere $2,800 during the same period, according to the latest campaign finance reports, but has more cash on hand than Worsley.

The deadline to file the reports for the five-month period that ended May 31 was July 2.

Pearce's campaign finance report initially stated he had more than $116,000 cash on hand, but that figure was incorrect. He actually has about $32,000 on hand, a big chunk of which came from contributions during his historic recall campaign last year.

His campaign made an error on its report when it entered receiving an $85,016 contribution from the Optometric PAC in December 2010.

But it appeared the campaign mistakenly entered the committee's ZIP code – 85016 – into the contribution field.

The Pearce campaign later amended the report to reflect the correct amount. In any case, Pearce still has more cash on hand than Worsley.

Worsley reported having nearly $18,000 left in the bank on May 31. While Worsley's reports showed he raised much more money than Pearce, the businessman loaned himself $50,000.

LEGISLATIVE DISTRICT 16 SENATE

Sen. Rich Crandall, R-Mesa, raised nearly $12,000 from January through May this year.

A big chunk of that money — about $10,000 — was a transfer from his old campaign committee.

His previous committee raised money while he was still in Legislative District 25.

Crandall has since moved into Legislative District 16, where he faces a primary contest against Rep. John Fillmore, R-Apache Junction.

The Mesa Republican had a little less than $10,000 left in the bank as of May 31.

Fillmore, meanwhile, is running with public financing and already received about $14,000 from the Arizona Citizens Clean Elections Commission.

All told, Fillmore has received nearly $17,000, including the money he raised to qualify for Clean Elections funding.

Fillmore has about $11,000 cash on hand.

LEGISLATIVE DISTRICT 13 SENATE

Sen. Don Shooter, R-Yuma, also outraised his primary election opponent, Sen. John Nelson, R-Litchfield Park.

Shooter raised nearly $10,000 in the first five months of this year.

Nelson, meanwhile, received only about $2,000 during the same period.

Nelson, however, has previously stockpiled cash and had almost $29,000 in cash balance by January, which is the beginning of the current reporting period.

Nelson also had more cash on hand by May 31 — nearly $27,000.

In addition to what he raised this year, Shooter also had some money at the beginning of this period.

All told, he had nearly $14,000 cash on hand.

LEGISLATIVE DISTRICT 26 SENATE

Sen. Jerry Lewis, R-Mesa, raised a little more than $9,000 in the current reporting period.

The bulk of his money came from individual contributions.

Lewis had about $6,000 cash on hand.

His general election opponent, Democratic Rep. Ed Ableser, is running with public financing.

Ableser's report, however, did not reflect Clean Elections money.

LEGISLATIVE DISTRICT 20 SENATE

Rep. Kimberly Yee, who is running uncontested in the Republican primary but faces two opponents in the general election, received roughly $6,000 in the first five months of this year.

But Yee's campaign will be well-oiled in the general election.

She began the year with a $29,000 cash balance. As of May 31, Yee had more than $32,000 in the bank.

Meanwhile, Doug Quelland, the former Republican House member who is running as an independent, raised less than $1,000 for the reporting period.

He loaned his campaign an additional $4,000, boosting his finances to almost $5,000.

But he also quickly burned through much of that amount. By May 31, Quelland had less than $900 cash on hand.

Democrat Michael Powell, meanwhile, is running with public financing. His campaign finance report, however, didn't reflect money he received from Clean Elections.

LEGISLATIVE DISTRICT 1 HOUSE

The district has three legislative incumbents, including House Speaker Andy Tobin, R-Paulden. That means Rep. Karen Fann, R-Prescott, and Sen. Lori Klein, R-Anthem, are presumably fighting for the second seat in the district since many political observers believe Tobin will retain his seat. Fann has gotten out of the gate faster than Klein, raising more from individual contributors and finishing the reporting period with more cash on hand.

Klein may have technically raised more, $15,736 to Fann's $12,451, but Klein's money came from her Senate war chest and she spent only $203, all of it for fuel, while Fann spent $2,748. Klein finished the period with $15,532 on hand while Fann reported $19,294. Tobin raised $20,045 and finished with almost $67,000 in cash.

LEGISLATIVE DISTRICT 22 HOUSE

Rep. Phil Lovas, R-Peoria, who was appointed to the House in the chain reaction that followed the resignation of former Sen. Scott Bundgaard, is outpacing his challengers, including Bundgaard ally Jeanette Dubreil.

Lovas raised more than $30,000 in individual contributions, compared to Dubreil's $2,520 in total contributions. Dubreil is Bundgaard's former campaign manager and was one of the finalists to finish out the term of Judy Burges, who was appointed to the Senate seat vacated by Bundgaard. But in this race, Dubreil is bringing up the rear in fundraising. Another challenger, David Livingston, raised $11,124, though $10,000 of that came from a personal loan.

LEGISLATIVE DISTRICT 23 HOUSE

Scottsdale school board member Jennifer Petersen wants a seat in the Legislature and she lent her campaign $10,000 to win it. Coupled with individual contributions, Petersen ended the reporting period with more than $14,000 raised. Incumbent Michelle Ugenti, R-Scottsdale, raised $11,013 and ended with almost $28,000 after having a nice cushion from fundraising in 2010 and 2011.

Rep. John Kavanagh, R-Fountain Hills, meanwhile, started out with more than $13,000 in cash and added $7,479 in individual contributions. Kavanagh and Ugenti have also both outspent Petersen so far.

Panel rejects ballot measure for legislative salary hike

Voters routinely reject proposed pay raises for legislators, but for the second election in a row they won't have that opportunity.

On a 2-2 vote July 3, the Commission on Salaries for Elective State Officers rejected a proposed ballot measure that would have asked voters to increase lawmakers' salaries to $30,000 from $24,000.

The five-person panel was missing the potential tiebreaker because House Speaker Andy Tobin declined to make his appointment to the commission.

Tobin, R-Paulden, said he left the position vacant because he didn't think it was appropriate to ask voters to raise legislative salaries at a time when the economy is still struggling.

"The economy's not right. I don't think we should be giving anybody, elected officials, raises right now. The economy's in the tank. It's improving. It's getting better. But this isn't the time," Tobin said. "When the private sector starts improving, that's a better time to have that conversation."

Tobin's actions echo those of Gov. Jan Brewer two years ago. Brewer didn't make her two appointments to the commission in 2010 because she wanted to keep the proposal off the ballot while the economy and the state's finances were in such poor shape. The commission had enough members for a quorum, but was unable to meet because the governor's appointees include the chairman.

The Senate president and Arizona Supreme Court chief justice appoint the two other members.

This year, the governor's appointees split on whether to increase lawmakers' salary, which is lower than at least 21 other states.

Brewer appointee Dennis Mitchem, a retired CPA, introduced the motion to refer the $6,000 pay raise to the ballot. Mitchem, who served on the commission in 2000 and 2002, said lawmakers in Arizona are "shamefully underpaid."

House Speaker Andy Tobin says now is not the time for a legislative pay raise.

"If we can't recommend a pay increase for something as woefully inadequate as something like our legislative salaries, we're endorsing the status quo," Mitchem said. "I don't want to endorse the status quo. For me that's unacceptable."

The motion was seconded by attorney Joe Kanefield, who was appointed by Chief Justice Rebecca Berch. Kanefield said he doubted that voters would approve the measure — voters have rejected the last six proposed pay raises — but said legislators are underpaid and thought it should be referred nonetheless.

"I don't see my job as a commissioner to necessarily predict what the voters will do," he said. "I always would prefer to err on the side of letting the voters decide the question."

But the other two members disagreed, though they both said legislative salaries are too low. Bill Feldmeier, who was appointed by Senate President Steve Pierce, said he saw no point in referring a ballot measure that voters are going to reject anyway.

"I think the timing is real bad for that," Feldmeier said. "I wouldn't feel comfortable with any recommendation other than to hold off … maybe two years from now."

Chairwoman Lisa Atkins, Brewer's other appointee, said she didn't believe the commission should be asking for a legislative pay raise at a time when the public and private sectors have cut back so much.

Atkins also was concerned about the lack of deliberation about how much of a pay raise the panel would recommend. Mitchem chose his figure after a commission staffer explained that the 2008 commission sought a $30,000 salary because a proposal to increase lawmakers' pay to $36,000 lost by a relatively small margin in 2006.

"I like to be able to explain how we arrive at things," Atkins said. "To pick a number that almost made it four years ago to me is not substantive."

The commission must refer its proposal to the Secretary of State's Office by July 9 to get it on the ballot, meaning it will not have enough time to reconsider.

Voters have not approved a legislative pay increase since 1998, when they raised lawmakers' salaries to $24,000 from $15,000.

The commission also said it will schedule a future meeting to discuss salaries for statewide elected officials, judges and clerks of the court. Those proposals, which do not go to the ballot, must be forwarded to the governor, who has discretion on whether to include the pay hikes in her recommended budget.

AZ Supreme Court reinstates Cheuvront's mom on ballot

luige.delpuerto@azcapitoltimes.com

Jean Cheuvront-McDermott, a Democrat who is running for a House seat in central Phoenix, is back on the Aug. 28 primary ballot.

The Arizona Supreme Court on July 3 reinstated Cheuvront-McDermott on the ballot after a trial court earlier disqualified her for not following the law that governs the use of candidates' names.

Her legal name is Lois Jean McDermott, but she argued that she has been known as Cheuvront-McDermott for years.

Her Democratic challengers charged she is trying to cash in on the name ID of her son, former Sen. Ken Cheuvront.

While the Supreme Court agreed with the trial court that the candidate's nomination paper didn't strictly comply with statute, it nonetheless found that she "substantially complied" with the law given the circumstances of her case.

In its ruling, the high court essentially said the candidate is also known by the name "Cheuvront" and there was no suggestion that the listing on her nomination paper could cause confusion among voters about her identity.

Still, the court ordered election officials to use the correct format required by statute in placing her name on the ballot: "McDermott, Jean Cheuvront."

She is running in a four-way primary for two spots in the House against Minority Leader Chad Campbell, Rep. Lela Alston, and Tom Nerini.

The court battle has split the Democratic challengers in the district, and both sides heaped their share of criticism upon each other.

Campbell and Alston are running as a team. They are also supporting Rep. Katie Hobbs, who is taking on Ken Cheuvront for the Senate seat.

Attorney Kory Langhofer, Cheuvront-McDermott's lawyer, had argued in his client's appeal to the Supreme Court that even if the justices were to rule that using "Cheuvront" strayed from the technical requirements of law, she shouldn't be disqualified because she substantially complied with the law and she cannot be removed from the ballot for "mere technical departures" from form.

Langhofer said the use of "Cheuvront" doesn't confuse or mislead voters.

"She used the name exclusively for 32 years while she became acquainted with the voters in District 24, and many people still know her by that name exclusively," Langhofer said, adding, "It cannot be confusing or misleading to associate a person with a name with which she is in fact associated."

Attorneys representing Rep. Ben Arredondo, a Tempe Democrat facing a federal bribery indictment, say the massive volume of evidence presented to them is making it difficult for them to mount a defense.

Indicted lawmaker uses campaign cash for legal expenses

GARY GRADO
gary.grado@azcapitoltimes.com

Rep. Ben Arredondo spent $15,000 of his legislative campaign money on a criminal defense attorney about six weeks before a grand jury indicted him on accusations he took bribes, according to recently filed finance reports.

Attorney services are legitimate expenses, but most politicians who dip into their campaign funds to pay lawyers have election law or political-related issues, said Matt Roberts, spokesman for the Secretary of State's Office.

Roberts said Clean Elections candidates have restrictions on what they can spend money on, but candidates who don't take public money for their campaigns don't. Arredondo did not participate in the Clean Elections system in his 2010 campaign.

"I'm not sure this would be any different than anything else," Roberts said.

Arredondo, a Tempe Democrat who is not running for re-election, entered a single $15,000 expense on April 3 for "professional services" and "attorney fees" for Tyrone Mitchell, a lawyer who lists his area of practice as "criminal defense, immigration law and personal injury" on the State Bar of Arizona directory.

Arredondo was indicted May 16. The indictment states that FBI agents interviewed him on Jan. 17.

Mitchell, who is not currently representing Arredondo in the criminal matter in federal court, did not return a call seeking comment.

When reached for comment July 3, Arredondo said to call a number listed for his Tempe City Council political committee, Citizens for Arredondo, and then he hung up. Calls to that number were not returned.

Arredondo raised no money in the period from Jan. 1 to May 31. He began the reporting period with $21,707 and finished with $4,809 cash on hand. His other expenses included $459 in office supplies and a total of $65 to Qwest.

He also donated $750 to Chicanos Por la Causa, $50 to Planned Parenthood and $450 to Arizona Fire Chiefs Association 100 Club.

Arredondo is charged with bribery, extortion, mail fraud and false statements. The indictment alleges he accepted bribes in the form of sporting event tickets and the purchase of tables at charity events in exchange for brokering a land deal.

The FBI set up a fake company, Longford Solutions, and undercover agents posed as representatives of the business trying to cut a land deal with Tempe.

Arredondo's campaign finance reports from his time as a Tempe city councilman reveal that one of the charity events undercover agents paid for was a dinner where his family was honored for its contribution to education in Tempe.

Arredondo's lawyers object to document dump

The investigation that ensnared Rep. Ben Arredondo, D-Tempe, reached across state lines and produced so much evidence that his attorneys are pleading for help from the court to manage it.

In recently filed documents in U.S. District Court in Phoenix, Arredondo's attorneys say the "multi-year, multi-state, multi-media" investigation yielded 790,400 pages of documents and 139 hours of audio and video surveillance. They complain that the massive amount of evidence, coupled with an indictment that doesn't sufficiently provide details of his alleged crimes, is making it difficult to mount a defense.

Kurt Altman, a criminal defense attorney and former assistant U.S. attorney who is not affiliated with the case, said the defense's use of "multi-state" could mean anything from a truly extensive investigation crossing state boundaries or FBI agents simply had to do some traveling to follow up with witnesses or leads. The many hours of recordings also suggest wiretaps.

Altman said such a massive dump of evidence raises a question of fairness because the government has been able to use all of its resources for as long as necessary to build a case while the defense is under time constraints of a pending trial. Arredondo will also rack up a massive legal bill, Altman predicts.

"How is he going to pay for all this?" Altman said.

Arredondo hired the firm of Perkins Coie, and three attorneys are listed as his defense counsel, but Altman said he expects there are several more attorneys and paralegals working on the case.

U.S prosecutors had said in court documents shortly after Arredondo's May 16 indictment that the investigation of him was only tangentially related to a more massive investigation.

The defense and federal prosecutors have argued in a recent series of motions whether Arredondo is due a "bill of particulars," a written statement that provides the facts alleged in the indictment related to the crime.

The indictment alleges that Arredondo accepted bribes in the form of tables at charity events and sporting-event tickets in exchange for wielding his influence as a Tempe city councilman and Arizona legislator in a phony land deal.

Arredondo's lawyers want the government to be more specific in explaining how each alleged bribe he accepted corresponds with each alleged action he took as an elected official.

Federal prosecutors said all the answers the defense seeks are in the mountain of evidence given to them.

"You could flounder in 800,000 pages for years and not know what you're doing," Altman said.

He said Judge Frank Martone of U.S. District Court might order the government to at least let the defense know which evidence pertains to Arredondo to move the case toward trial, but that doesn't relieve the defense from the ethical responsibility of reviewing all of it.

Energy independence through solar makes economic sense

COMMENTARY

CARL MULAC

If there's one thing we have plenty of in Arizona, it is sunshine. The sunshine draws people here, powering our tourism industry and real estate industries. But more and more, the sunshine is powering something else — the opportunity for energy independence.

This is certainly the time to be thinking about independence, and that means more than just hot dogs and flags (even though I love both). To me, independence means freedom, and freedom means choice — the choice to live where and how you want. As a local real estate developer for the past 30 years, I've seen first-hand that for Arizonans — and especially in our retirement communities — this increasingly means having access to efficient, clean and affordable housing options. More and more, solar power is playing an important role in providing those choices.

Our ample sunshine makes solar an obvious choice for our state. In fact, Arizona is now ranked fourth in the nation in the amount of installed solar power per capita, with nearly 17,000 solar panels on homes, businesses and military bases across the state.

For homeowners — especially those looking to save money — solar makes sense. Nationwide, solar prices have fallen 20 percent in the past year, making what was once a luxury item for a few a must have for many Arizonans looking to lower their electricity bills.

This is increasingly true in our state's retirement communities. At our company's active adult community CantaMia, located in Goodyear, every home built has included solar as standard. Along with other green building features, these solar panels make CantaMia's homes 60 percent more energy efficient than an average new code-compliant home. On a hot July day in the Valley, that means major savings on electricity.

Our commitment to solar power doesn't just make environmental sense — it makes economic sense. After all, we're a business, and while we want to help protect the planet, we've also got a bottom line to think about. We see solar panels as a major selling point for our homes — that's a key reason we built 55 Energy Star-certified homes in the Phoenix area in 2011. These homes will save our customers a total of more than $75,000 on utility bills each year — or $1,363 per home. How's that for "going green?"

The cost savings from efficient homes and solar power are especially important for those on fixed incomes. It may come as a surprise to some that a "retirement community" has made a commitment to solar, but we think Arizona and states around the country will be seeing more and more active adult residences moving to solar. It just makes economic sense.

So it's no surprise that the solar industry is one of the fastest growing sectors of the Arizona economy and a powerful jobs engine for our state.

There are nearly 1,000 solar offices here that employ approximately 5,000 Arizonans, according to the Solar Foundation, and the greater Phoenix area has become a major hub for global solar industry leaders like Suntech and First Solar.

We like the idea of being able to choose our energy source. We like the freedom that comes with having money in the bank, thanks to lower electricity bills. We like the idea of energy independence powered by our sunshine. To put it simply, we like solar power, and we'd like to see more of it.

Democrats' attack on Flake is history sadly repeating itself

COMMENTARY

JARRETT MAUPIN

The Democratic Party has been foolish in its rush to question and attack U.S. Rep. Jeff Flake's commitment to civil and human rights, all in the name of defending black South Africans. The argument offered up by the party that most black Americans hold membership in today, sadly reminds many of those same blacks of the positions the party had taken in the 1940s and 1960s.

Hypocritical and offensive positions claiming moral superiority, the kind of self-righteous judgment passed by bourgeois white liberals who themselves are often the worst kind of oppressors. The great white defenders of virtue, who see quite clearly the plight of poor, colored, and oppressed natives of foreign soil. Yet, at the same time are sinfully, sickeningly, and conveniently blind to the same economic, political, and social abuses committed against the colored populations in this nation, often within their own "spheres of influence."

Not once has the local black community been approached in this election cycle by the Arizona Democratic Party in a formal and intentional way to candidly and sincerely assess its need for and frustrations with the lack of financial, educational, and political progress being made in Arizona. Instead, black Arizonans are witnessing a painful repeat of history. Like the invisible black veterans of World War II and the unsung legions of blacks heroes of the civil rights movement, black voters today are watching the Democratic Party stand up for the dignity of blacks abroad while sitting out the struggle for equity, equality, and employment for blacks here at home.

Black voters endure, tasting the familiar bitter tears dripping from their collective mind's eye, as their African cousins are used, like pawns or expendable political property, to advance a "lily-white liberal" electoral agenda. Convincing themselves, again, that being "played" by the party is some sort of inescapable plantation ritual or mandatory generational rite of passage for progressive blacks. Now, you will not hear this from the "happy to be here" Negro leadership of today or as the great Congressman Rev. Adam Clayton Powell, Jr. would say, "the handkerchief head, yassa' mista' Charlie, token black leaders…" in and out of the party.

However, in the heart of the ghetto, in the pews of poor black churches, in labor halls, pool halls, fraternal clubs, and veterans' posts you will hear it. The great love and high hopes for, but deep dissatisfaction with the party of Brother Roosevelt and Brother Kennedy.

Obama's election was an impressive and historic moment in time for black America, but it was not the beginning or the end of the journey to political deliverance and the kind of substantive change the black masses are still waiting for. Just as Thurgood Marshall's appointment to the Supreme Court did not stop the black community's legal battles for social justice, Obama's election and likely re-election will not end the pursuit of the dream of Dr. King. Whether or not the local Democratic Party leadership understands this is unclear, but a quote from a classic Janet Jackson song that sums up the big question in the mind of many loyal local black Democrats just might help them to: "What have you done for me lately?"

Attacking Flake's record is understandable, acceptable and anticipated, but it cannot be the soul and substance of the race for one of Arizona's Senate seats. Especially if it includes the devious use of racially charged allegations by white Democrat leaders who have yet to muster a serious commitment for or real plan to improve the lives of black Arizonans. Black Arizonans with more of their young men in state prisons than enrolled in state universities, double the unemployment rate of white Arizonans, no one of their color in the state House of Representatives, and unfairly limited or "redlined" access to capital for the purchasing of homes or the starting of small businesses. I pray Fannie Lou Hammer's party remembers that the work starts at home, because in 2012 black Arizona is "sick and tired of being sick and tired…"

CAPITOL QUOTES

"When defending a lawsuit, you only need to win on one issue, so it makes sense to raise several issues — even if you expect only one or two to succeed." — Attorney Kory Langhofer, who successfully persuaded the Arizona Supreme Court to reinstate Democrat Jean Cheuvront-McDermott on the primary ballot.

"If Obama wins I think you'll see Republicans all over the country opting out of the expansion." — Rep. John Kavanagh, R-Fountain Hills, on the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling that the federal government can't force states to go along with the Medicaid expansion in the Affordable Care Act.

"It's pretty much a no-brainer to take the deal that's on the table." — Rep. Steve Farley, D-Tucson, on whether Arizona should implement the Medicaid expansion from the Affordable Care Act.

"I just didn't feel like we needed to have a meeting about it." — House Speaker Andy Tobin, R-Paulden, on why he didn't make an appointment to the commission that decides whether to put a proposed legislative pay raise on the November ballot.

"How is he going to pay for all this?" — Defense attorney and former assistant U.S. Attorney Kurt Altman commenting on the amount of legal work required for Rep. Ben Arredondo's defense to sift through 790,400 pages of documents and 139 hours of recordings the government turned over as evidence in the Tempe Democrat's bribery case.

Retiring Pinal County judge is termed unfit to remain on bench

The Commission on Judicial Performance Review found itself in a quandary June 27 when it came time to vote on the qualifications of Pinal County Superior Court Judge Janna Vanderpool.

The commission knew medical issues had kept Vanderpool off the bench for months and she had applied for medical retirement, but she was still among 77 judges slated to be on retention ballots in Pinal, Maricopa and Pima counties in November.

The veteran judge, who never had problems getting elected in 12 years on the bench, also had low marks from attorneys who were surveyed on her performance.

The commission ultimately decided to evaluate her anyway since she was still eligible for retention. It voted 23-6 to deem Vanderpool unfit for the bench, a suggestion that would have to be noted in the Secretary of State's publicity pamphlet, which is mailed to every household with a registered voter. The commission determined all of the other judges were fit to serve.

But Vanderpool, 58, submitted her resignation June 30 to Gov. Jan Brewer. She told the Arizona Capitol Times that the vote made sense to her, and that she believes it was more reflective of her intentions to retire than her performance as a judge.

"I had somebody say to me, and quite rightfully so, 'Well I'm surprised there were any yes votes to retain you at all given that you haven't been there, you told them you applied for medical retirement, that you can't do the job. Why would anyone vote to retain you?'" Vanderpool said.

Vanderpool

Her resignation becomes effective Sept. 30.

Vanderpool, a Democrat, was elected in 2000 and never had an opponent until 2008, a race she easily won, but now that Pinal County has joined the merit and retention system, she came under a different kind of scrutiny.

Until this year, Pinal County was among 13 counties where voters directly elect their judges. Maricopa and Pima counties have used the merit system since 1974, a process in which a selection committee vets and nominates judicial prospects for the governor to choose from for appointment. Appointed judges then have to go before voters every four years on whether they should keep their jobs. The Commission on Judicial Performance Review evaluates judges slated for the ballot and determines whether they "meet" or "do not meet judicial performance standards."

Pinal County was required to join the two larger counties after the 2010 census showed it had surpassed the population of 300,000, the threshold established by law for joining the merit system.

Rules governing the commission bar members from speaking publicly about their thought process in evaluating individual judges, but they rely heavily on survey responses from attorneys, witnesses, litigants and jurors.

In Vanderpool's case, six out of 16 attorneys surveyed found her legal ability to be either poor or unsatisfactory and 26 percent surveyed gave her low scores under the category of "conduct that promotes public confidence in the court."

"A lot of members had a lot of trouble with the results," said Commission Chairman Mike Hellon.

Vanderpool said the survey results were "glaringly misleading" because they were based on such a small sample.

"There may have been a backlash to being out a lot lately," she said.

The commission's vote deeming her unqualified was the first time a judge got such a rating since 2008 and only the second time since 1998. The commission recommended against retaining Judge Crane McClennen of Maricopa County Superior Court in 2008, but voters allowed him to stay on the bench by 57 percent to 43 percent.

One of those commission members who voted against Vanderpool was Judge Carter Olson, the presiding Superior Court judge of Pinal County, a fellow Democrat who was also Vanderpool's boss when she was a prosecutor with the Pinal County Attorney's Office in the 1990s.

Olson, who voted with the bloc disapproving of Vanderpool's job performance, did not immediately return a call seeking comment. He will be on the Pinal County retention ballot with Judges Boyd T. Johnson, Stephen F. McCarville and Joseph R. Georgini.

Elizabeth Rueter, an attorney on the commission who also has practiced in front of Vanderpool and contributed money to her 2008 campaign, was one of the six voting she was qualified.

Rueter said she saw the vote simply as a question of whether she meets or doesn't meet standards and she found she adequately meets them.

Rueter said she's never had problems with Vanderpool's abilities as a judge.

"I didn't always like her rulings, but it had nothing to do with her abilities," Rueter said.

Vanderpool said she was diagnosed a few years ago with Sjogren's Syndrome, an illness that has zapped her strength and stamina, and she has tried to grind through it at work, but it has gotten progressively worse.

She said there are spans of days where she finds it difficult to even get out of bed and her doctor didn't give her any hope of improving.

"A couple months ago I accepted that and realized it's time to retire," she said.

Bundgaard letter claims vast conspiracy to destroy him

LUIGE DEL PUERTO
luige.delpuerto@azcapitoltimes.com

Insisting he was the "victim" and not the perpetrator of domestic violence, former Sen. Scott Bundgaard lashed out at the city of Phoenix, its police department and the chairman of the Senate Ethics Committee, claiming they colluded to destroy him.

In a letter he sent to news organizations on July 1, Bundgaard maintained he never claimed legislative immunity and he never hit his then-girlfriend, Aubry Ballard, during a roadside scuffle that left both of them bruised last year.

The incident led to an ethics inquiry in January. Bundgaard, who pleaded "no contest" in a deal with prosecutors on a domestic violence charge stemming from the scuffle, resigned from the Senate moments before he was scheduled to testify at the legislative trial.

Bundgaard had kept out of the limelight since his resignation – until last week – when he filed a notice of claim against Phoenix and its police department.

In the claim, Bundgaard accused one of the officers of withholding information and of helping to ensure his defeat in the ethics trial. Bundgaard is seeking $10 million in damages.

Bundgaard also denies he ever invoked legislative immunity, despite officers asserting he did so to avoid arrest.

The Peoria Republican claims in the letter that there was no need for him to assert legislative immunity because he wasn't charged that night.

Bundgaard

He added his notice of claim would demonstrate that Phoenix engaged in "collusion and cover up in order to intentionally and maliciously destroy me."

The city could not be immediately reached for comment.

A spokeswoman for the Phoenix Police Department, meanwhile, said her office won't comment because the notice of claim serves as a precursor to a lawsuit.

In his letter, Bundgaard said he waited this long before filing his notice of claim because he didn't want to jeopardize his "no contest" plea, which he said he accepted because the city prosecutor promised him an "expensive court battle."

He resigned from the Legislature as the trial was ongoing, he said, because it was "useless" to respond.

Multiple witnesses, including an off-duty officer who saw the incident, told the Senate Ethics Committee during the trial that Bundgaard was the aggressor that night.

All told, the ethics investigation was a disaster for Bundgaard, who had already lost his role in leadership as a result of the scuffle.

In his notice of claim, Bundgaard said Senate President Steve Pierce and Senate Majority Whip Frank Antenori told him the testimony by Ballard and her friend caused his colleagues to turn against him.

"It has only been over the last five months that I have realized the extent of collusion, cover up and corruption by the City of Phoenix in order to wipe me out," the former senator said in his letter.

Bundgaard also sharply criticized Sen. Ron Gould, a Republican from Lake Havasu City and chairman of the Senate Ethics Committee.

Bundgaard called Gould's committee a "Kangaroo Court," reiterating his complaint that the chairman had already publicly shown his bias against him for months before the actual ethics hearing.

He accused Gould of deliberately "(suppressing) exculpatory evidence" during the ethics investigation and of colluding with the police to do it.

"If you want to know 'why' I would sue the City of Phoenix for $10 million, ask yourself how much you would have to be paid to endure personal, professional and financial destruction," he said.

Gould described Bundgaard's accusations as a "flat out lie," adding he never had any contact with police officers outside the actual ethics trial.

"Scott Bundgaard is ethically challenged," Gould said.

"He needs to just man up, pull up his big boy pants, lie in the bed that he's made for himself and move on with his life," Gould told the Arizona Capitol Times.

But even if she does, it won't end the debate over the exchange's establishment.

The chief complication of establishing an Arizona-run health insurance exchange, which would also determine eligibility for Medicaid and the federal Children's Health Insurance Program, lies in finding a permanent source of funding for the program.

The federal government is currently picking up the tab to set it up, but there's no assurance the money will be provided in perpetuity.

In short, Brewer will have to persuade a recalcitrant Legislature to not only authorize the program, but also to fund it.

While there's no official estimate on how much running the exchange would cost Arizona, it would definitely mean another government bureaucracy to oversee what could potentially be the biggest insurance marketplace in the state.

Many lawmakers are ideologically opposed to the health care law and they regard implementing any of its components as yet another capitulation to an overreaching federal government.

Not only that, repeal of the health care law has become Republicans' battle cry, and influential lawmakers are arguing that establishing the exchange is entrenching the law.

Sen. Nancy Barto, a Republican from Phoenix and chairwoman of the Senate Healthcare and Medical Liability Reform Committee, said that would make it even harder to undo.

"It will entrench the law further at a time when we know now what the stakes are, and how badly the law will need to be repealed in the new Congress," she said.

What Barto essentially wants is for Arizona and other states to engage in some kind of protracted war over the health exchange, arguing that if more states refuse it, Congress would be more easily persuaded to terminate the law.

While politicians hem and haw, consumer advocates, hospitals and the insurance industry are urging policymakers to push ahead with a state-run exchange.

Diane Brown, head of the consumer watchdog Arizona Public Interest Research Group, said the state knows more about the nuances of the insurance market here, and is in a much better position to factor in those elements than the federal government.

"It should be clear to Arizona's decision-makers that it is in our state's best interest to move forward with a health insurance exchange," Brown said.

It's a position that's also embraced by Chuck Bassett, a senior executive with Blue Cross Blue Shield of Arizona.

If Arizona manages the exchange, Bassett said, the state can take into account the health care disparity between rural and urban areas, and the fact that Arizona has numerous American Indian tribes.

Bassett is acutely aware of the political challenges the health exchange program will have to overcome.

But he said regardless of how people feel about the federal law, its constitutionality has already been decided — in its favor.

Bassett is also skeptical that the law would be repealed even if Republicans run the political table.

"But if they do, you can stop the exchange," he said.

Bassett's point is clear: The health care overhaul is the law of the land and it's best for residents here if the exchange isn't operated out of some government building in Washington, D.C.

"There has been time to sort of ponder this and, you know, play a little politics with it and that sort of thing. But time is out," he said.

Don Hughes, who heads the governor's efforts to plan for the exchange, said the Brewer administration hasn't made a final decision whether to push for the exchange's establishment.

But Hughes said they're on track to operate the exchange and can accommodate consumers by October 2013, which is the exchange's open-enrollment period.

Already, there's one looming deadline for states like Arizona.

By Nov. 16, Arizona has to submit its blueprint to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services and let the agency know if the state would operate its own exchange.

Here's another complication for Brewer, albeit a minor one: It remains unclear whether the governor can submit its blueprint and commit Arizona to run the exchange without expressed legislative consent.

"We'll be talking with our general counsel and making a decision about that," Hughes said.

If Brewer's office concluded that she needs the Legislature's authorization, lawmakers could be looking at a special session possibly right after the general election.

But even if she doesn't need lawmakers' consent this November, she'd still need to persuade them to fund the exchange later.

Senate President Steve Pierce said his "gut reaction" is to oppose the exchange.

But he hasn't totally shut the door on the possibility of a state-run web portal.

"I do not care for the exchange. However, I need to know more facts," the Republican leader told the Arizona Capitol Times. "My gut reaction is I'm opposed to it, but we need to look at the facts, and it may be that we need to do something."

MEDICAID EXPANSION

Rep. John Kavanagh, who chairs the House Appropriations Committee, said the cost of expanding Medicaid coverage — otherwise known as the Arizona Health Care Cost Containment System — would be "phenomenal."

"I would be very reluctant to get involved with that," the Fountain Hills Republican said. "I don't think you'll see many Republican-led states expanding. It's not just an issue that the state can't afford it … but the federal government can't afford it either."

Republicans such as House Speaker Andy Tobin and Sen. Al Melvin said they would prefer to implement reforms to Arizona's Medicaid program rather than expand it.

Tobin, R-Paulden, said Arizona should root out fraud and abuse in AHCCCS to cut costs, while Melvin, R-SaddleBrooke, said Arizona should enact reforms to the civil justice system. Melvin also wants the federal government allow people to buy health insurance across state lines.

"I'm not a believer in expansion of government health care services," Melvin said.

The Arizona Hospital and Healthcare Association, which opposed last year's AHCCCS enrollment freeze for childless adults, wants to see as many people covered by the program as possible and hopes policymakers will consider the full expansion. But Peter Wertheim, the association's vice president for strategic communications, said his group may have to find another route.

"Clearly there was concern about the direction the federal program would've taken us, so then I guess the question is, what now?" Wertheim said. "I think we're going to need to again not rule anything out but not expect people to automatically embrace an expansion."

Wertheim said the hospital group will sit down with the Governor's Office, lawmakers and other stakeholders in the process to work on a more "Arizona-centric" solution. Instead of expansion, Wertheim said Arizona may want to look at "some other creative method," such as recent policies like insurance premium subsidies, high-risk pools, or the AHCCCS safety net care pool, which uses money from political subdivisions to obtain federal matching funds.

"I think in the months to come, more specifics will come out," he said.

Melvin suggested that Gov. Jan Brewer follow the lead of other Republican governors who have already declared their intentions to refuse the Medicaid expansions.

At least seven GOP governors, including South Carolina's Nikki Haley, Louisiana's Bobby Jindal and Florida's Rick Scott, have said they won't expand their Medicaid programs, and at least eight others have indicated they probably won't either, according to media reports.

Brewer's office said she is considering the state's options and hasn't made any decisions about whether to expand coverage under AHCCCS.

Don Hughes, the governors' health policy adviser, said the Ninth Floor is still studying last week's Supreme Court ruling and evaluating its options. He said the Governor's Office plans to meet with industry leaders, lawmakers, AHCCCS and other stakeholders, and hasn't yet decided on a course of action.

"At this point we're just looking at what our options are and trying to figure it out. It's a complicated decision. I think we need to take some time and be thoughtful here," Hughes said.

When asked whether it's possible that Arizona would expand AHCCCS coverage under the Affordable Care Act, Hughes said, "I would say that I don't know whether we will or we won't. I think we have to take a look at what the options are and go from there. It's just too premature to talk about anything else."

But Brewer's past comments on the issue left less room for discussion. When Brewer asked the Legislature in 2010 to join a 26-state lawsuit against the Affordable Care Act, the Medicaid mandate was one of her top concerns.

Her special session call in March of that year included two items — authorization for a lawsuit over the health care law, and a message urging Congress to fully pay for any mandatory federal entitlement expansions.

The governor railed against the billions of dollars the mandate would cost Arizona, and wrote letters to Obama, U.S. Senate President Harry Reid and then-House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, saying her cash-strapped state simply couldn't afford it.

A Brewer spokeswoman said it would be premature for the governor to comment on the issue, saying only that she has not yet decided whether to implement the expansion.

The additional costs that Brewer and legislative Republicans worried about in 2010 are still there, but are mostly uncertain. The Joint Legislative Budget Committee estimated that if Arizona implemented the full Medicaid expansion — which would also require it to end a partial AHCCCS enrollment freeze it implemented in 2011 — it would cost the state an additional $40 million in fiscal year 2014 and $210 million in fiscal year 2015.

However, JLBC does not yet know how much the expansion would cost after 2015. JLBC said the cost may depend on unknown factors.

The mandate would have forced state Medicaid programs to cover anyone earning up to 133 percent of the federal poverty level, which would be $30,657 for a family of four. Prior to the enrollment freeze for childless adults in July 2011, AHCCCS covered anyone earning up to 100 percent of the federal poverty level.

Many proponents of expanding Medicaid say the federal matching funds that states receive make it a deal that's too good to pass up.

From 2014 through the end of the fiscal year 2016, the feds would pay for 100 percent of the cost for covering people who earn between 100 and 133 percent of the federal poverty level. The federal match — which is normally set at 66 percent — would gradually drop to 90 percent from 100 percent by 2020.

Arizona would also get increased money for childless adults and others earning between 33 percent and 100 percent of the federal poverty level — the population covered by Proposition 204, the 2000 ballot measure that drastically expanded AHCCCS coverage.

The federal match for the Prop. 204 population would start at about 85 percent and increase to 90 percent by 2020, but only if Arizona goes along with the full Medicaid expansion envisioned in the Affordable Care Act.

Some Democratic lawmakers are holding out hope that Arizona will expand AHCCCS coverage, but few have any optimism that the Republican-controlled Legislature will do so. Assistant House Minority Leader Steve Farley, D-Tucson, said GOP lawmakers need to consider the strain that the uninsured are putting on Arizona's hospitals.

"It's pretty much a no-brainer to take the deal that's on the table. But if you're going to reject it because ideologically you don't like the person that's offering the deal, I think you're committing malpractice on the people of Arizona," Farley said. "Can the state afford not to? What happens when our emergency rooms close down? What's that going to do to our economy, to our people and to our business environment? I've talked to hospital CEOs, and they're struggling right now."

Nelson drops re-election bid, Shooter now unopposed in LD13

luige.delpuerto@azcapitoltimes.com

Sen. John Nelson, a veteran politician and longtime legislator, abruptly announced July 5 that he is retiring from public service and is dropping his bid for re-election.

Nelson's decision paves the way for Sen. Don Shooter, R-Yuma, to secure the Senate seat in Legislative District 13.

With Nelson dropping out, Shooter becomes the lone candidate for the position.

The race was shaping up to be one of the most contentious of the 2012 elections, as Nelson was viewed as a more centrist Republican, while Shooter is a leading Tea Party activist.

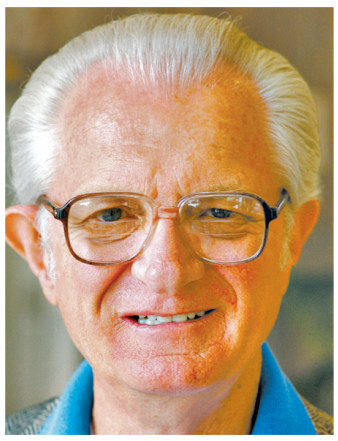
Shortly after redistricting, Shooter moved and the two incumbents found themselves in the same district.

"After a lot of consideration and discussions with my wife and family, I have decided to retire from public service and withdraw my name for consideration for state Senate in LD13," Nelson said in a written statement.

"Twenty-eight years is a long time in elected office and it is time for me to spend more time with my wife, my children, and my grandchildren," he said.

Prior to being elected to the Legislature in 2000, Nelson served on the Phoenix City Council for 16 years.

Nelson, 76, said he plans to work on the passage of a ballot measure he authored to allow for trust land exchanges in order to preserve military installations in Arizona.



Nelson

In the same email, Gov. Jan Brewer touted Nelson's work, calling his commitment to protect military bases here "unparalleled."

"From his time at the City of Phoenix to his service in the Legislature, John Nelson is a model for what elected officials should strive to be," Brewer said, thanking Nelson for his more than two decades of public service.

News of his retirement plan quickly spread, and so did accolades from Capitol observers.

Kurt Davis, a Republican political consultant, called Nelson a "class act."

"He is a class act and a credit to public service," Davis wrote on his Twitter account. "A true loss for Arizona. A good man!"

Nelson's campaign only raised a small sum during the first five months of the year — about $2,000.

But he had a stockpile of cash from previous campaigns. Nelson had $27,000 by May 31, more cash on hand than Shooter.

Shooter earlier had told the Arizona Capitol Times he and Nelson reached a deal to avoid running against each other.

Under the supposed deal, Nelson would run for the House while Shooter would run for the Senate.

Nelson initially refused to comment, but he later affirmed that he was running to keep his seat in the Senate.

"I'm not sure there ever was (a deal) in place," Nelson had said. "I'm running for the office that is in my district that I have been for four years."

Due to redistricting, Nelson was drawn into the Legislative District 13, which leans Republican.

Shooter, meanwhile, decided to move into Nelson's district after his home was carved into a Democratic-leaning district. Shooter said LD13 is only several blocks from his current home.

Senate confirms former Pima County judge as U.S. attorney for Arizona

BRANDON ROSS
Cronkite News Service

WASHINGTON — The full Senate on June 29 confirmed former Pima County Superior Court Judge John S. Leonardo to be the next U.S. attorney for Arizona.

Leonardo will fill the federal prosecutor's job held by former U.S. Attorney Dennis Burke, who resigned in August during the investigation of Operation Fast and Furious, the botched "gun-walking" operation in the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives' Phoenix office.

Leonardo has the backing of Arizona Sens. Jon Kyl and John McCain, who hailed the approval of the former judge and former prosecutor for the job of top federal prosecutor for the state.

"Judge Leonardo's decade of experience on the bench and previous work in the U.S. Attorney's Office will be strong assets," the Republican lawmakers said in a joint statement June 29.

Leonardo could not be reached for comment and the U.S. Attorney's Office in Phoenix declined comment.

But attorneys who have worked with Leonardo praised the confirmation.

"He's a very good man," said Larry Hammond, a criminal defense attorney in Phoenix, who also worked as a deputy assistant attorney general in the Justice Department. "He's a very well-respected judge."

"We were very impressed by his judgment and independence," said Hammond, an attorney now with Osborn Maledon.

Another criminal defense attorney in the state, Walter Nash, said after Leonardo was approved by the Senate Judiciary Committee last month that he was "imminently fair" and "simply a perfect choice" for the U.S. attorney's job.

Leonardo's nomination was approved without debate by unanimous consent in the Senate the afternoon of June 29, one of 22 nominations approved in one vote.

When he nominated Leonardo on March 21, President Barack Obama said he had a "distinguished and impressive" career and that he expected that as U.S. attorney, Leonardo would be "relentless in his pursuit of justice."

Leonardo was a Pima County Superior Court judge from 1993 to until this February, when he retired from the bench.

A native of Des Moines, Iowa, he graduated from Notre Dame University and the George Washington University School of Law, before serving as an assistant state's attorney in Prince George's County, Maryland, from 1972 to 1973.

From 1973 to 1982, he was an assistant U.S. attorney for the Northern District of Indiana, before becoming an assistant U.S. attorney for Arizona. He held that job from 1982 to 1993, when he became a judge.

The U.S. attorney for Arizona has three responsibilities, according to the office's website: prosecuting federal criminal cases; prosecuting civil cases brought by the United States or defending the government from civil suit; and collecting federal debts that are "administratively uncollectible."

Navajo lawmakers reject water rights settlement

FELICIA FONSECA
The Associated Press

FLAGSTAFF — Navajo lawmakers have rejected a settlement to recognize the tribe's water rights from the Little Colorado River basin, likely sending the tribe and its Hopi neighbor back to court to resolve their claims.

The Tribal Council voted 15-6 against the settlement July 5 during a special session in Window Rock. The vote also puts a stop to legislation in Congress to move the settlement forward because it needed the blessing of both the Navajo and Hopi tribes.

"I think it's a missed opportunity," said Jared King, a spokesman for the Navajo Nation. "These things don't come by very often. It's disappointing."

Critics saw the settlement as an attack on their aboriginal rights and tilted toward corporate interests. They urged lawmakers to vote it down and continue fighting in court. A case in Apache County had been on hold while the tribes and 30 other entities worked out a settlement decades in the making. Aside from Zuni Pueblo, no other Arizona tribe has acquired rights to the Little Colorado River.

Under the settlement, the tribes would have waived further claims to the river basin if the federal government funded more than $300 million in groundwater delivery projects. Republican Sen. Jon Kyl had said the settlement would address the water needs of the reservations and provide certainty of the state's water supply for off-reservation communities.

Tribes often trade what could be huge water claims for the promise of federal funding to deliver water to tribal communities. A few American Indian water rights cases have been resolved through litigation.

Navajo President Ben Shelly ultimately backed the settlement as a way to avoid protracted courtroom battle and guarantee water delivery to tribal communities. He and Tribal Council Speaker Johnny Naize held public hearings across the reservation and received hundreds of comments on the settlement.

Shelly said July 5 that he would look for other ways to bring water to the communities on the western side of the reservation.

Naize has said lawmakers weren't willing to accept the settlement as is and had urged colleagues to table it for further discussion. He said he would advocate for an independent review of the settlement and renewed negotiations that would result in more favorable terms for the tribe, though it's unclear whether the other parties would be willing to work toward another settlement.

"We will not be rushed into a settlement that a majority of our citizens are uncomfortable with," said Naize, who voted in favor of it.

The Hopi Tribe took two separate votes on the matter — one to oppose Kyl's legislation and the other to support the settlement.

Much of the opposition to the settlement came from a provision that would provide the Navajo Nation capital with water from the Colorado River if the tribe extends the lease for a coal-fired power plant and the waiver language. But the failure of the Navajo Nation to extend the lease would not have killed the settlement in its entirety.

State could tie executions record in 2012, and pace likely to continue

BRANDON ROSS
Cronkite News Service

WASHINGTON — When prison officials pronounced convicted killer Samuel Lopez dead from a lethal injection at 10:37 a.m. June 27, it was the fourth execution in Arizona in the first six months of this year.

At that pace, the state could be on track to match its record of seven executions in a single year, said legal experts.

And with 125 inmates on Arizona's death row and no major legal challenges to slow the rate of executions on the horizon, they said they don't expect to see the numbers start dropping anytime soon.

"This pace may continue for a while," said Andy Silverman, a University of Arizona law professor.

A fifth execution, of convicted murderer Daniel Cook, is currently slated for Aug. 8 and at least two more are possible before the end of the year.

There is an outside chance of others, but attorneys familiar with the system said they do not expect those cases to finish moving through the courts until sometime next year.

There have been only 13 executions in the state since 1999, but most of them took place since 2010: Three in 2000, one each in 2007 and 2010, followed by four in 2011 and four so far this year.

The increase comes as a series of legal challenges that had long stalled executions in the state have been cleared away, opening the door to the increase in executions.

Experts say the biggest legal challenge was Ring v. Arizona. That case went all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court, which ruled in 2002 that only juries could weigh the aggravating factors that determine whether a convicted criminal in a capital case should get the death penalty. Previously, judges had that power.

The court's decision could have sent scores of death row cases back for resentencing and many cases were put on hold until a later court decision clarified which cases Ring could be applied to.

The gurney on which Arizona death row inmates are strapped prior to getting the lethal injection leading to their executions.

"Once Ring was resolved, the cases started to move again," said Dale Baich, an assistant federal public defender in Arizona.

"If the trend continues and death sentences are not vacated along the way," executions could continue at a similar pace for some years, Baich said.

Rep. Cecil P. Ash, R-Mesa, said that would not necessarily be a problem for those of his constituents who believe it can take too long to carry out a death sentence in the state.

While he knows there are death-penalty opponents, he said, "For those that support capital punishment, they feel it takes too long."

The Department of Corrections said that since 1937, an inmate on death row spends an average of 12 years there, but most officials say the number now is closer to 20 years.

"I know my constituents are concerned it takes too long," said Ash, who said he asked the Legislative Council early in his career what could be "done to accelerate the process."

Baich's counterpart is Kent Cattani, chief counsel of criminal appeals for the Arizona Attorney General's Office. While Baich defends death row inmates, Cattani argues for the state.

Cattani said there are currently 49 Arizona death penalty cases pending in the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, the last stop before the U.S. Supreme Court. Two of those cases have been affirmed by the appeals court and are awaiting Supreme Court review, but Cattani said it would be "unusual" if the high court agreed to hear those cases.

"From the time the 9th Circuit decision is announced, it's usually about a year till an execution is carried out," Cattani said.

He said he believes two cases — those of Richard Stokley and Edward Schad — are far enough along in the process that they could be finished before year's end.

While they can make educated guesses based on the progress of legal proceedings, both Cattani and Baich caution that predicting the number of executions in a given year is an impossible task.

Baich's guess is that "if the trend continues and death sentences are not vacated along the way," executions in Arizona will continue at the current pace for some years to come.

Nationally, there has been a fairly steady decrease in executions, from 98 in 1999 to 43 in 2011, according to the Death Penalty Information Center. Because of the lag in carrying out death sentences, a center official said executions being carried out now are more of a reflection on the past than the present.

"Executions reflect not so much the attitudes and trends right now, but 10 or 15 years ago," said Richard Dieter, executive director of the center, a national anti-death penalty group.

Stalling Death

Court cases that have affected Arizona executions in recent years:

Ring: Only jurors, not a judge, can consider the aggravating factors that are weighed when deciding whether to impose a death sentence in a capital case.

Summerlin: The decision in Ring would not be applied retroactively to cases decided before Ring.

Baze: Lethal injection was ruled constitutional.

Smith: The federal courts asked the state courts to answer a technical question on the standard of review for a direct appeal.

2012 EXECUTIONS:

Arizona inmates put to death so far this year:

Robert Moorman: Executed Feb. 29 for the 1984 stabbing death of his mother while he was on a prison furlough, after which he cut the body into pieces and dumped the parts.

Robert Towery: Executed March 8 for a 1991 murder in which he injected battery acid into a robbery victim before strangling him.

Thomas Kemp: Executed April 25 for a 1991 murder of a robbery victim who was shot in the head.

Samuel Lopez: Executed June 27 for the 1986 rape and murder of a woman whom he stabbed 26 times before cutting her throat.

Ex-Arizona governor detained at border checkpoint

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Former Gov. Raul Castro was recently detained at a Border Patrol checkpoint in southern Arizona in 100-degree heat after the vehicle he was traveling in triggered a radiation sensor.

The Arizona Republic reports that the detention was made around midday on June 12 at a checkpoint on Interstate 19 north of Tubac as Castro was traveling from his home in Nogales to celebrate his 96th birthday in Tucson.

The Mexican-born Castro was governor of Arizona from 1974 to 1977. He was the state's first and only Hispanic governor.

Castro said agents sent him to another inspection area and continued to question him outside his vehicle even though he explained that he had undergone hospital testing on his pacemaker the previous day, likely triggering the sensor.

U.S. Customs and Border Protection officials confirmed in an email that they stopped Castro for "a possible trace of radiation" and said its policy requires agents to "identify and resolve all sources of radiation regardless of the circumstances," which officials did in this case.

Castro said he was detained for 40 to 45 minutes, but the federal agency said it lasted 10 minutes.

The former governor downplayed the detention, noting that he wasn't pleased with the way he was treated but didn't file a complaint.

He said that he understands Border Patrol agents are "there to do a job" but that they need a better system for dealing with elderly people. He said he was exposed to the sun during part of the questioning.

"Once I identified myself, who I was, and that I had been to the doctor, I was under medical care, I have a pacemaker on my heart, (I would have thought) that they would have been more considerate and said, 'Keep on going.' But that didn't happen," Castro said.

Castro's wife is calling for changes in Border Patrol procedures.

"It's traumatic, to say the least, for an old man," said Castro's wife, Patricia.

She said the Border Patrol officials need to use "more common sense" when they encounter elderly people who have undergone medical procedures.

Alessandra Soler, executive director of the American Civil Liberties of Arizona, said Castro's experience with agents was not unique.

"This happens all the time in terms of these types of indiscriminate stops of individuals not suspected of any wrongdoing," Soler said.

She said agents should have used discretion instead of relying solely on technology to decide to detain Castro.

No one-size-fits-all approach to wooing Hispanics

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

In Arizona, Mexican immigrant Carlos Gomez backs Republican Mitt Romney because he's more conservative on social issues than his Democratic opponent.

In New Mexico, Tomasita Maestas says she will pick the presidential candidate who has the best plan to fix education and the economy.

In Miami, Colombia native Luna Lopez probably will vote for President Barack Obama now that he's decided to halt the deportation of many illegal immigrants brought to the United States as children.

The reasons that Hispanics give for choosing between Obama and Romney are just as diverse as the countries that they or their ancestors once called home, suggesting there's no one-size-fits-all approach to courting the nation's fastest-growing minority group.

The Latino vote isn't monolithic or, really, a voting bloc. It includes a range of people with varying opinions. Among them are Republican-leaning Cubans in Florida, new Mexican immigrants and longtime descendants of Spanish settlers in the Southwest, and Democratic-tilting Puerto Ricans in the East.

Immigration policy would seem to be the natural top issue for these voters, except that nearly two-thirds of Hispanics are born in the U.S. Their priorities are the same as the general population — jobs, the economy, education and health care.

"We need to see more jobs here, that's my No. 1 priority and what I want to hear about," says Stefan Gonzalez, an almost 18-year-old from Denver, whose heritage includes Spanish, Mexican and Native American roots. Gonzalez, who works in a suburban Denver pawn shop, says he plans to vote for Obama this fall.

In Albuquerque, Ernest Gurule, an 84-year-old whose ancestors settled New Mexico in 1580, says his main issue is the federal health care plan upheld by the Supreme Court last week, and that he'll back Obama in part because of it. Also, the Democrat, adds: "It's too expensive to change horses midstream."

Democrats and Republicans are in a fierce race to figure out how to best reach Hispanics.

In the short term, these voters could decide the outcome in Nevada, Colorado, New Mexico, Florida and elsewhere. The long-term stakes are even bigger because Hispanics are projected to account for roughly 30 percent of the population by 2050, doubling in size and, potentially changing the national political landscape.

Like most minorities, Hispanics traditionally have leaned Democratic. But a recent Pew Research poll indicates that Hispanics also are the fastest-growing group of independent voters, with 46 percent now shunning a party label compared with 31 percent six years ago. Such results only underscore how diverse Hispanics are and the challenges for the political parties.

"It is going to be a very hard fight to win," says Jennifer Korn, the executive director of the Republican-based Hispanic Leadership Network, which was established to help bring more Hispanic voters to the GOP. "The more they assimilate, the more sophisticated they become and that's when they start dividing between parties."

For now at least, Obama and his Democrats have an advantage, with the latest polls showing 65 percent of Hispanics back Obama and 25 percent back Romney.

Brian Conklin, far right, a regional campaign director for the re-election of President Barack Obama, briefs volunteers about registering new voters prior to them canvassing a heavily Latino neighborhood June 29 in Phoenix.

The Democrats' campaign has worked to keep that edge, helped by Obama's new immigration policy and the Supreme Court's decision to side with the administration on most of an Arizona law that many immigrants viewed as overly harsh.

His campaign has spent the past year setting up offices with grassroots outreach to Hispanic communities in the Southwest, as well as in important states such as Ohio, North Carolina, Pennsylvania and Florida.

Mindful of the diversity among Hispanics, Obama has custom-tailored his outreach, including tweaking Spanish dialect for different regions.

For instance, in Florida the campaign has two distinct outreach plans. One focuses on Cuban-Americans in Miami who tend to lean Republican and are less concerned about immigration; the other speaks to traditionally Democratic Puerto Ricans, who are U.S. citizens from birth, as well as new immigrants from Central America.

Obama also has promoted the new health law, which can resonate in states such as New Mexico, which has one of the highest rates of uninsured in the country.

Romney has plenty of ground to make up after a bruising primary season filled with tough rhetoric that even Republicans acknowledge turned off many Hispanics. He recently established a Hispanic advisory group that includes top elected Republican Hispanics.

During the primaries, the former Massachusetts governor pledged to veto legislation, known as the DREAM Act, that would give a path to citizenship to young immigrants who came to the United States illegally as children but have since attended school or served in the military. He has since toned down his anti-immigration stance, which included self-deportation, telling a Hispanic leadership gathering in the Orlando area that he would address illegal immigration "in a civil but resolute manner."

Alexandra Franceschi, a spokeswoman for the Republican National Committee's Hispanic effort, made clear that the GOP outreach will focus broadly on the economy. "Hispanics are Americans and are facing the same issues as everyone else, chronically high unemployment, lower pay and rising health care costs," she said.

Republicans have noted that under Obama, the Hispanic unemployment rate is higher than the national average. And Hispanics' median household income fell 7 percent between 2000 and 2010, from $43,100 to $40,000, according to the Pew Hispanic Center.

What drives Hispanics to vote depends on who's asked.

Lopez, a 20-year-old new citizen and college student from Colombia, cites Obama's policy shift on deportation as reason she's likely to pick him when she casts her first vote in the country.

"The issue didn't directly affect me, but I have many family members and friends who it did," she said.

In Arizona, Gomez, a 43-year-old priest who immigrated to Phoenix 15 years ago, backed Obama's policy change. But Gomez says immigration isn't his priority because "immigrants will continue coming across the border no matter what we do." He says he's voting for Romney because, like him, the Republican opposes gay marriage and abortion rights.

In Albuquerque, Maestas, a 37-year-old mother and office manager, is focused intently on pocketbook issues. Immigration, she says, is only important to "a certain point" because, "If you can't take care of your own, how are you going to take care of others?"

Treasurer of Brewer's PAC on probation with board

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The treasurer of Gov. Jan Brewer's political-action committee is on probation with a board that licenses accountants and had his registration as a securities salesman revoked in 2009.

The Arizona Republic reports that the Arizona Corporation Commission had handed down a $200,000 fine against accountant Robert Hockensmith and found that he had violated state laws and engaged in dishonest or unethical practices.

The Arizona State Board of Accountancy placed Hockensmith on probation for three years in October 2010.

Hockensmith can continue to work as an accountant, but the board is monitoring him.

Paul Senseman, a spokesman for Brewer's committee, says the committee is "not familiar with anything that may be of concern" related to Hockensmith.

When asked why Hockensmith was named treasurer, Senseman said he did not know.

HOUSE

Eric Holder contempt citation

Yes: Gosar, Franks, Quayle, Schweikert, Flake
No: Pastor, Barber,
Not voting: Grijalva

Voting 255 for and 67 against, the House on June 28 held Atty. Gen. Eric Holder in contempt of Congress for refusing to provide a House committee with certain subpoenaed documents related to its investigation of the "Fast and Furious" gun-walking operation, which is linked to a U.S. border agent's murder in 2010. The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives, a Justice Department agency, conducted the operation. Agents allowed up to 2,000 illegal firearms to flow into Mexico in hopes that by tracing their spread, they could apprehend leaders of drug cartels. Two Fast and Furious weapons were found near where U.S. border agent Brian Terry was killed by outlaws. While Holder has provided the committee with thousands of emails and other subpoenaed documents, the panel charges he has withheld thousands more that could be self-incriminating. President Obama has asserted executive privilege over the withheld documents.

Speaker John Boehner, R-Ohio, said "it is our constitutional duty to find" the facts behind the failed operation and the agent's death. "We showed more than enough good faith, but the White House has chosen to invoke executive privilege. That leaves us no other option."

Carolyn Maloney, D-N.Y., said Rep. Darryl Issa, R-Calif., the sponsor of the contempt citation, publicly "acknowledged that the president and the White House did not know about the gun-walking operation."

A yes vote was to hold Holder in contempt of Congress.

Democratic bid for Mukasey testimony

Yes: Pastor, Grijalva, Barber
No: Gosar, Franks, Quayle, Schweikert, Flake
Not voting: None

Voting 172 for and 251 against, the House on June 28 defeated a Democratic motion seeking testimony on U.S. gun-trafficking operations on the Southwest border from five individuals not heard from in the Republicans' 16-month "Fast and Furious" probe (preceding issue; H Res 711). Among the five listed in the resolution are Michael Mukasey, who was President George W. Bush's last attorney general, and Alice Fisher, an assistant attorney general under Bush. The resolution states Mukasey was informed in a briefing paper about the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives' desire, expressed in 2007, "to expand" gun-trafficking efforts in Mexico, and that in a separate matter Fisher authorized wiretaps in a Bush administration gun-trafficking effort known as "Operation Wide Receiver."

John Dingell, D-Mich., said: "The Republican majority has engaged in what appears to be a partisan, political witch hunt with the attorney general as its target. Over the 16-month investigation, Democrats were not permitted to call a single witness to testify."

Darrell Issa, R-Calif., responded to Dingell: "You're just wrong. There were plenty of opportunities for the minority to ask for witnesses. They chose not to, except at one hearing, and then they wanted the former attorney general (Mukasey)."

A yes vote backed the Democratic motion.

Democratic bid to rebuke Issa

Yes: Gosar, Franks, Quayle, Schweikert, Flake
No: Pastor, Grijalva, Barber
Not voting: None

Voting 259 for and 161 against, the House on June 29 tabled (killed) a move by Democrats (H Res 718) to formally disapprove of the way Rep. Darrell Issa, R-Calif., the chairman of the Committee on Oversight and Government Reform, has conducted his panel's 16-month investigation of the "Fast and Furious" gun-walking operation. The resolution faulted Issa, in part, for having "chosen to call the attorney general of the United States a liar on national television without corroborating evidence...."

As a privileged resolution, the measure was not debatable.

A no vote was to formally rebuke Issa.

Declaratory judgment against Holder

Yes: Gosar, Franks, Quayle, Schweikert, Flake, Barber
No: Pastor
Not voting: Grijalva

Voting 258 for and 95 against, the House on June 28 gave its Committee on Oversight and Government Reform authority to hire counsel for pursuing in federal court a declarative judgment upholding the newly voted contempt citation against Atty. Gen. Eric Holder. Republicans said they needed this authority (H Res 706) because the Justice Department, headed by Holder, will not enforce what is the first contempt of Congress charge ever lodged against a sitting Cabinet member. With Holder having announced he will leave the Justice Department at year's end, it is doubtful that any court action to enforce the citation would occur quickly enough to affect his status.

Daniel Lungren, R-Calif., said the committee needs this authority because "it would be folly...to suggest that (the Justice Department) would carry out the actions that we just voted upon against the attorney general."

Eleanor Holmes Norton, D-D.C., said: "This subpoena is so partisan and political that I expect any court to do just what our committee should have done -- compel the parties to sit down and negotiate."

A yes vote backed the resolution.

Road projects, student loans, flood insurance

Yes: Pastor, Grijalva, Barber
No: Gosar, Franks, Quayle, Schweikert, Flake,
Not voting: None

Voting 373 for and 52 against, the House on June 29 sent the Senate a catchall bill to fund road-construction, transit and highway-safety programs at a cost of about $109 billion until October 2014, freeze interest rates on newly issued student loans at 3.4 percent until July 2013, and renew the National Flood Insurance Program until October 2017.

The transportation measure would be funded mostly by the Highway Trust Fund, which draws its revenue from the 18.4 cents-per-gallon federal gasoline tax and the 24.4 cents-per-gallon federal diesel tax. The student-loan interest freeze will cost the Treasury at least $5.5 billion in lost revenue, to be recouped by measures such as raising premiums that the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp., a federal agency, charges participating corporations for insuring their pension obligations.

National Flood Insurance, run by the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) is funded by a combination of policy premiums and Treasury loans, with private agents selling the policies. The bill authorizes the program to add $3 billion in new debt to the $17.8 billion it already owes the Treasury. About 1 percent of policyholders receive about 40 percent of claims paid.

A yes vote was to pass the bill.

Taxpayer-subsidized air service

Yes: Franks, Quayle, Schweikert, Flake, Barber
No: Gosar, Pastor, Grijalva
Not voting: None

Voting 164 for and 238 against, the House on June 26 refused to defund and thus close the Essential Air Service program, which subsidizes daily commercial flights to more than 120 smaller cities and rural outposts nationwide. The amendment sought to shift the program's $114 million fiscal 2013 appropriation to deficit reduction. The vote occurred during debate on a bill (HR 5972), later passed, to appropriate $51.6 billion in 2013 discretionary spending for the departments of Transportation and Housing and Urban Development and related agencies. The bill awaits Senate action.

‘Top-two’ primary campaign submits signatures

A campaign seeking to create a “top-two” primary election system submitted 365,486 signatures to the Arizona Secretary of State’s Office on July 5, a campaign that has thus far cost nearly $1 million.

The Open Government Committee needed 259,213 valid signatures of registered voters to put its proposed constitutional amendment on the November ballot. The initiative, known as the Open Elections/Open Government Act, would create an election system in which all candidates for partisan races appear on the same primary ballot and the top two candidates advance to the general election, regardless of party affiliation.

According to campaign finance reports, the committee raised at least $928,000 and spent at least $927,000 in its bid to overhaul Arizona’s election system. Much of the funding has come from Greater Phoenix Leadership, other business groups and CEOs across the state.

Former Phoenix Mayor Paul Johnson, one of the leaders of the campaign, said the effort began with a group of CEOs concerned about the direction the state is heading.

“It began with a group of CEOs that were very discouraged by what was happening to the state, our inability to focus on economic development and education, and the fact that extreme measures had kind of spilled over the edge,” Johnson said.

Former Phoenix Mayor Paul Johnson, with his back to the camera, speaks with the media in front of the 365,486 signature petitions his group, the Open Government Committee, filed on July 5 with the Arizona Secretary of State’s Office. The group seeks to qualify the Open Elections/Open Government Act for the November ballot. The initiative would change Arizona’s primary election system so that the two candidates with the most votes, regardless of party, would advance to the general election.

Supporters say the top-two primary will elect more moderate candidates and keep the more extreme elements of both parties out of office. Johnson cited the 2011 recall of then-Senate President Russell Pearce, a leading proponent of anti-illegal immigration measures in Arizona, as an example of what the top-two primary might bring.

“The reason that folks were upset about that particular election was they knew if they went back to a Republican primary, the outcome would’ve been no different than it had been before. But the minute all the voters had a right to vote in that primary, you ended up with a very different result,” Johnson said.

California, Louisiana and Washington state use forms of the top-two primary. Retired attorney Karen Schroeder, the secretary of the Open Government Committee, said the Arizona initiative was modeled on Washington’s system, which was upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court in 2008.

Johnson said he is confident that voters will support the Open Elections/Open Government Act if it makes it onto the ballot. The Democrat-turned-independent said he expects the initiative to face opposition from “the parties, extremists, some lobbyists who do well in the existing system and some people who run campaigns in the current system,” but doesn’t know how well funded it would be. No opposition campaign has filed yet with the Secretary of State’s Office.

Consultant Joe Yuhas, of the firm Riester, which is working on the initiative, said the campaign will have all the funding it needs, though he wouldn’t say how much he expects the campaign to cost.

“For us to reveal that would be revealing strategy. But obviously we’re well funded. People from both sides of the aisle have stepped forward to help us out to this point. Once we’re certified for the ballot we think our fundraising is going to pick up even more. We’ll raise and spend what we need to to pass the initiative,” Yuhas said.

July 5 was the deadline to file signatures for ballot measures with the Secretary of State’s Office.

Tom McClintock, R-Calif., said: “Apologists for this wasteful spending tell us it is an important economic driver for these small towns -- and I’m sure that’s so. Whenever you give away money, the folks you’re giving it to are always better off. But the folks you’re taking it away from are always worse off to exactly the same extent.”

Tom Latham, R-Iowa, said the program “plays a key role in the economic development of many rural communities....Does the program need reform? Absolutely. That’s why last year we (limited it to) existing communities and...removed the requirement that larger and more expensive planes must be used in the program.”

A yes vote was to end the Essential Air Service program.

Public-housing budget

Yes: Gosar, Franks, Quayle, Schweikert, Flake
No: Pastor, Grijalva, Barber
Not voting: None

Voting 160 for and 264 against, the House on June 27 refused to cut $562 million, or about 12 percent, from the $4.7 billion fiscal 2013 budget for operating expenses at the nation’s 14,000 public-housing developments in 3,500 communities. With their rents, the 2.3 million tenants of these units also pay a share of operating expenses. This vote, which occurred during debate on HR 5972, did not affect the $1.9 billion the House has budgeted next year for capital expenses at public-housing developments.

Amendment sponsor Paul Broun, R-Ga., objected to “a $500 million increase (for public housing) at a time when our nation is broke and American taxpayers are struggling to put food on their tables and looking for jobs.”

Tom Latham, R-Iowa, said the budget targeted by this amendment “provides many of the necessary operating and maintenance activities for our housing authorities, including health, safety and sanitation.”

A yes vote was to cut spending for public housing.

SENATE

Food and Drug Administration

Yes: Kyl
No: None
Not voting: McCain

Voting 92 for and four against, the Senate on June 26 sent President Obama a bill (S 3187) giving the Food and Drug Administration more funds and regulatory power for delivering safe medical products from global and domestic supply chains to U.S. consumers. The bill authorizes $6 billion over five years in FDA user fees on companies seeking approval of new brand-name and generic drugs, medical devices and biotechnology products. Additionally, the bill renews programs for assuring that children receive safe pharmaceuticals; seeks to prevent any recurrence of shortages of lifesaving drugs; promotes new drugs for treating rare diseases and diseases that have become resistant to existing antibiotics and stiffens penalties for drug counterfeiting. With 40 percent of finished U.S. drugs manufactured overseas and 80 percent of ingredients originating abroad, the bill gives the FDA more tools for inspecting plants in countries such as India and China.

Mike Enzi, R-Wyo., said the bill makes “important reforms to foster drug innovation and patient access to new therapies. It (provides) accelerated-approval...for drugs to reflect advances in science over the past 20 years (and) contains important reforms that will help mitigate...drug shortages.”

Richard Burr, R-N.C., said: “This is the first time we have ever had a user fee for generic pharmaceuticals. Generics were called that because generics were created after the patent life expired so we could bring low-cost products to the market....We are creating generic user fees which will raise the generic price for the American people.”

A yes vote was to send the bill to the president.

Renewal of three major laws

Yes: Kyl
No: McCain
Not voting: None

Voting 74 for and 19 against, the Senate on June 29 sent President Obama a bill (HR 4348) projected to add or retain more than two million construction jobs in the transportation sector, hold down borrowing costs for 7.4 million college students and boost certain real estate markets by providing a long-range extension of National Flood Insurance. While the massive spending bill is mostly self-funding or paid for by changes in pension rules and other measures, it raises the debt limit for the flood-insurance program by about $3 billion to nearly $21 billion.

The transportation measure prohibits earmarks; provides financial incentives for state crackdowns on distracted drivers; combines 90 transportation programs into fewer than 30 and increases regulation of the touring and long-distance buses. The measure also allows longer driving hours for agricultural truckers during planting and harvesting seasons; permits family farmers to use their vehicles within a 150-mile radius without having to obtain a commercial driver’s license; gives states more flexibility in allocating federal funds; sets the framework for a new national freight program and expands federally funded tax credits that leverage private investment in road projects of regional or national significance.

National Flood Insurance covers about 5.6 million residential and commercial properties located in flood plains in 22,000 communities. The program was established in 1968 to reduce federal disaster payments to flooded areas and serve a high-risk market largely shunned by private insurers.

A yes vote was to pass the bill.

Report: several share blame for election woes

ANCHORAGE — An independent review by a retired Superior Court judge has found that the outgoing Anchorage city clerk, a now-fired deputy clerk and Anchorage Assembly members share the blame for the city's troubled municipal election.

Election workers ran out of ballots at more than half of the city's polling places during the April election.

Investigator Dan Hensley says he found no evidence of any intent by city or election workers to sway the election.

His report describes a combination of inexperience, hands-off management and short-sighted planning that left printed ballots unused at City Hall even as Anchorage residents scrambled from precinct to precinct looking for a place to vote.

Hensley has recommended additional election training for city employees and poll workers, a review of election training guides and more formalized Assembly oversight of the clerk's office.

2nd death in wildfire plane crash confirmed

PIERRE — Gov. Dennis Daugaard has confirmed a second death in the weekend crash of an Air Force tanker that was helping fight a wildfire in the Black Hills.

Daugaard's statement July 3 did not identify the second victim. The family of Lt. Col. Paul Mikeal of Mooresville, N.C., identified him as a victim on July 2.

The C-130 from an Air National Guard wing based in Charlotte, N.C., was carrying a crew of six when it crashed July 1 while battling the White Draw Fire near Edgemont, in southwest South Dakota, that now encompasses nearly 8 square miles.

City councilman faces sex offense charges

SANTA ANA — A Southern California prosecutor says a sitting councilman from the city of Santa Ana is facing a dozen felony charges from false imprisonment to sex offenses.

Orange County District Attorney Tony Rackauckas says his office will detail the alleged crimes of Carlos Bustamante at a news conference. Bustamante was arrested July 2, and was being held on $100,000 bail.

Rackauckas says the councilman faces six felony counts of false imprisonment, three felony counts of assault with intent to commit a sexual offense and single counts of stalking, attempted sexual battery by restraint and other charges including several misdemeanors and sentencing enhancements.

Colorado

Police identify suspected fake firefighter

COLORADO SPRINGS — Police have identified a man arrested on suspicion of impersonating a firefighter at the most destructive wildfire in Colorado history.

Police say 53-year-old Kip Andy Petersen was wearing firefighting clothing when police officers approached him within an evacuation area last week. Police say Petersen falsely told officers he was a firefighter.

Petersen is the second person accused of impersonating a firefighter at a major Colorado fire this year. Michael Maher is accused of impersonating a firefighter at the High Park fire in northern Colorado in June and the Lower North Fork fire west of Denver in March.

Hawaii

Ethics commission fines Honolulu councilman $6,500

HONOLULU — A Honolulu councilman has been fined the largest amount imposed by the city's ethics commission.

The Honolulu Ethics Commission said July 2 that Nestor Garcia was fined $6,500 for not disclosing conflicts of interest regarding rail transit and development bills.

The commission says that as executive director of the Kapolei Chamber of Commerce, Garcia should have filed conflict of interest disclosures for 52 bills and resolutions when chamber board members testified in support of rail transit and other measures.

The commission found none of the outcomes of the measures would have changed after Garcia's vote was subtracted.

Garcia apologizes and says he did not intend to be misleading or deceitful. He has paid the fine, which the commission says is the largest fine imposed on a city official.

Idaho

Dispute over Portland containers hits Idaho port

BOISE — A union-on-union fight over whose members should plug in refrigerated shipping containers in Oregon has sent economic ripples 360 miles upstream to an Idaho port, where some customers have ditched river barges for trucks rather than wait out the uncertainty.

Port of Lewiston manager David Doeringsfeld said the labor dispute between longshoremen and electrical workers at the Port of Portland is "definitely affecting container traffic" on the Snake River that would ordinarily be barged downstream to the Columbia River, then Portland.

One international shipping company, Hanjin, won't call on Portland until the dispute is resolved.

That has some of Doeringsfeld's customers from Idaho's agriculture and wood-products industries concerned whether container vessels will be loaded with their goods. As a result, they've pulled their Hanjin container business from the river and instead trucked cargo to ports on Washington state's Puget Sound.

Illinois

2 clerks get OK to defend gay marriage ban

CHICAGO — Two county clerks from downstate Illinois have received permission to defend the state's gay marriage ban in court.

Effingham County Clerk Kerry Hirtzel and Tazewell County Clerk Christie Webb on July 3 got the OK to intervene in the lawsuit filed in Cook County by 25 gay and lesbian couples. They stepped forward after Cook County State's Attorney Anita Alvarez and Attorney General Lisa Madigan refused to defend the 16-year-old ban, which defines marriage as between a man and a woman.

The prosecutors say the law violates the Illinois Constitution's equal protection clause. But they didn't object to the downstate clerks' intervention. Webb says she has no position on gay marriage but just wants to ensure there's a uniform law for all counties.

Delegation heading to English air show

TOPEKA — Kansas Gov. Sam Brownback will lead a delegation of state and local officials heading overseas to promote aircraft built in the state.

The Republican governor will be joined by Commerce Secretary Pat George and representatives from the Greater Wichita Economic Development Coalition in attending the Farnborough International Airshow in England from July 9 through July 15.

The delegation will be seeking to expand export markets for Kansas aircraft. The state exports more than $2 billion in aircraft, accounting for more than 18 percent of all exports coming from Kansas.

Brownback says officials will be promoting the Kansas business climate for new job creation, including recent changes to the state's income tax code, as well as the Kansas work force.

Montana

Recount under way in legislative primary

HAVRE — Hill County officials say a recount is under way in the close Democratic primary race for state House District 32.

Incumbent Rep. Tony Belcourt requested the recount after official results showed that he lost the primary by three votes to Clarena Brockie of Hayes.

The Havre Daily News reports that the recount will be held in the five counties in which the district stretches, with results due to the Montana Secretary of State's Office by July 10. There is no Republican or third-party candidate, so the recount will determine the winner of the legislative seat.

Hill County Clerk and Recorder Darla Dahl says that Belcourt had to pay a $664.47 bond for the recount.

Nebraska

Governor's pay raise plan irks top union official

LINCOLN — The head of state government's largest union says Gov. Dave Heineman is discriminating against rank-and-file state workers by proposing to give some leading state employees bigger raises.

The Lincoln Journal Star reports that Heineman is designating some state employees as executive leaders. They get 4 a percent raise this year while most other state workers get 2 percent.

Nebraska Association of Public Employees union executive Julie Drake Abel says it's despicable and damages employee morale.

Executive leaders are defined as those who report to a director or deputy director and handle broad, complex issues. The governor's spokeswoman says people with more responsibility should receive more pay

As many as 128 state employees could get the 4 percent raise. About 10,600 union employees will get 2 percent raises.

Nevada

County offers Vegas-area building penalty amnesty

LAS VEGAS — Clark County building officials are offering temporary amnesty to let homeowners get up-to-date on permits even if they've already converted a garage, added a room, covered a patio or installed a new water heater.

The 90-day amnesty extends through Sept. 30. It applies to homeowners in unincorporated parts of the Las Vegas area.

County officials will waive penalties on self-disclosed residential construction work done without permits — as long as homeowners pay normal fees for permits, inspections and plan reviews.

Fees for residential-related construction usually range from $150 to $400, depending on the project.

New Mexico

Gangs, cartels growing in rural areas

ALAMOGORDO — Mexican drug cartels and nationally recognized outlaw motorcycle gangs are moving into more rural areas of New Mexico, and officials say communities need to get a handle on the growth.

The Alamogordo Daily News reports that officials say the gangs are recruiting young people in Otero and Lincoln counties to participate in drug trafficking because the areas are hot spots for traffickers.

Twelfth Judicial District Attorney Diana Martwick says her office just filed more than 100 drug cases stemming from an undercover drug trafficking operation conducted by the Otero County Sheriff's Office Narcotics Enforcement Unit a few months ago.

Officials report that gangs and cartels are growing in Roswell and New Mexico Four Corners region. Local law enforcement agencies have asked for increased presence from Homeland Security Investigations.

North Dakota

Former insurance agent accused of bilking $1.5M

BISMARCK — A former Bismarck-area insurance agent is accused of stealing nearly $1.5 million from clients, many of them elderly, over a period of nine years.

Brent Kitzan faces 27 felony counts relating to theft, insurance fraud and securities fraud. He was taken into custody over the weekend on an unrelated charge and state Insurance Department investigators served him with an arrest warrant issued June 28, North Dakota Insurance Commissioner Adam Hamm said July 3.

The insurance and securities departments conducted a joint investigation into Kitzan's practices after receiving multiple complaints, Hamm said. Both departments ordered Kitzan to stop doing business late last year.

Court documents do not list an attorney for Kitzan. A telephone listing for his business, Kitzan and Associates, is no longer in service, and a home telephone listing could not be found.

Kitzan is accused of collecting premiums from clients for bogus insurance policies, taking out personal loans from clients and collecting client money for investments that never were made. The crimes are alleged to have happened between 2003 and last year.

Oklahoma

Governor to showcase aerospace industry at air show

OKLAHOMA CITY — Gov. Mary Fallin will lead a delegation of seven Oklahoma aerospace companies to the Farnborough International Air Show in England next week.

Fallin will attend the air show on July 9 and July 10. Officials from the Greater Oklahoma City Chamber, the Tulsa Metro Chamber and the Oklahoma Department of Commerce also will attend.

The Farnborough International Airshow is one of the largest aviation events in the world. The show is estimated to attract more than 130,000 visitors, and will be attended by trade delegations from more than 40 countries. An estimated $47 billion in business orders are expected to be announced during the event.

Aerospace and other related defense industries support more than 150,000 jobs in the state for a total payroll of $5 billion annually.

Oregon

Columbia River bridge planners sued over height

PORTLAND — Columbia River Crossing planners have been sued over the proposed 95-foot height of a new Interstate 5 bridge between Vancouver and Portland.

A Vancouver company that makes oil drilling rigs, Thompson Metal Fab, says the bridge would block the enormous steel products it barges down the river. It's already a tight squeeze under the existing bridge with its lift span raised to 179 feet above the water.

The Oregonian reports the lawsuit was filed before a July 3 deadline. Columbia River Crossing spokeswoman Many Putney says it's still talking with Thompson and is confident of finding a solution.

The Coast Guard and Corps of Engineers also say a 95-foot high bridge with no lift span is too low. Two environmental groups also sued the Columbia River Crossing.

Texas

Number of uninsured drivers in state drops

DALLAS — The number of uninsured drivers in Texas has dropped more than 38 percent from a year ago.

Officials attribute the drop to both a 4-year-old program aimed at getting those drivers insured or off the road and a clean-up of the state's driver database.

The Dallas Morning News reports that statistics compiled in June indicate that just 13 percent of motorists, or about 2.6 million Texans, are driving without minimum insurance coverage, a violation of state law. One year ago, the state reported that about 22 percent of all drivers, or 4.2 million people, had no insurance.

A private contractor discovered problems in the insured-uninsured database earlier this year.

Texas drivers pay an estimated $1 billion a year to protect themselves from those who have no coverage.

TIMES PAST

Struggle over Saguaro National Park

For many years, the saguaro cactus stand east of Tucson attracted tourists and scientists, but until 1920, no effort was made to preserve these giant cacti. The Natural History Society of the University of Arizona in Tucson tried to obtain the area but experienced financial difficulties. In 1928, University of Arizona President Homer Shantz commissioned John Harrison to purchase the rights on 480 acres of saguaro land for the school. Shantz hoped to protect the saguaros and establish an observatory, which would be protected from artificial light.

Arizona Citizen Publisher Frank Hitchcock approached President Herbert Hoover with a view toward preserving the saguaro area as a national monument. Hitchcock and Shantz had convinced the reluctant Coronado National Forest Supervisor Fred Winn of the need for such a monument. Hoover agreed and his executive proclamation created Saguaro National Monument on March 1, 1933. In a tradition started by President Theodore Roosevelt, outgoing presidents proclaim national monuments.

After 13 weeks under Forest Service administration, President Franklin D. Roosevelt transferred Saguaro and 15 other monuments to National Park Service. The Park Service did not want six of the monuments including Saguaro. The decision, however, lay with the Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes. Local ranchers barraged Sen. Carl Hayden and U.S. Rep. Isabella Greenway with letters and telegrams pointing out their fear that under Park Service control, they would lose their grazing rights. Ickes insisted that all valid rights would be respected.

Determined that Saguaro National Monument would be administered by the Park Service, Assistant Director Arno Cammerer proposed to use the area as a research reserve.

Forest Service Director Frank Pinkley wanted the mountain portion of Saguaro returned to the Forest Service to end the uproar over grazing. When the National Park Service asked the university to donate its part of this land to the federal government, Shantz asked for $56,000 as reimbursement. By July 1936, after Harrison obtained options from all the private landowners, he met with Pinkley, who favored returning land to the Forest Service with the Park Service getting title to the cactus area. Harrison contacted Greenway and Hayden with the plan, stating that it had the support of Pinkley. Arizona Gov. B.B. Moeur contacted Ickes to request an emergency fund to purchase the state and private land within the monument boundary.

Harrison wrote to Hayden, requesting that he introduce a bill which would provide money to buy the state, university and private land. Hayden introduced several such bills in Congress, all to no avail. President Roosevelt notified Hayden that the general policy of acquiring private land in a park or monument would be through donation or purchase with donated money. Shantz was fired because of his inability to get the federal government to purchase the land.

In this 1950s photo, Dr. Alice Boyle of the Animal Pathology Department, University of Arizona, inspects a saguaro.

On Jan. 6, 1945, Hayden introduced a final bill. Several people including University of Arizona President Alfred Atkinson, Tucson Chamber of Commerce leader C. Edgar Goyette, Forest Supervisor Fred Winn, and rancher James Converse wished him a speedy passage. In 1945, the saguaros went through a bout of illness and Region Three Director H. R. Tillotson recommended abolishing the monument. Arno Demarray responded that Tillotson should not give up. Park Service scientists ascribed the cactus disease to grazing and recommended that livestock be removed. They asked UofA President J. Byron McCormick to convey its land to the Park Service. McCormick responded that he could not ask the university to "gratuitously" give the land to the Park Service.

Offers to make a land settlement led to negotiations with the state of Arizona, Bureau of Land Management, and National Park Service in late 1948. At this time, a group of Tucson citizens formed a Saguaro Land Committee, which recommended that the university and state exchange their monument land for other federal property. Local ranchers wrote to Hayden to get assurance that grazing rights would never be ended. Hayden relayed their request to the Park Service. Demaray replied that grazing would be stopped only in the best saguaro area.

There were 700 homestead applications to be examined before the BLM could deal with the state application. By 1959, the long struggle over monument land ended. On Aug. 25, 1959, Assistant Secretary of the Interior Roger Ernst issued a public land order by which 7,600 acres of the Tucson Mountain Park west of Tucson would be restored to mining. This action caused an intense protest and forced Ernst to suspend the effective restoration date and to announce that there would be public hearings in Tucson on the reopening for mineral development. Continued reaction, however, resulted in the hearing date being moved to Oct. 29. U.S. Rep. Stewart Udall told the people at the meeting that he would introduce legislation in the next congressional session to place part of the Tucson Mountain Park under the Park Service as part of Saguaro National Monument. In 1960, he introduced a bill by which federal land leased to Pima County for the park would be transferred to Saguaro National Monument. No action was taken on this bill. Sen. Barry Goldwater introduced a bill on Feb. 9, 1961, whereby ownership of the entire Tucson Mountain Park would be transferred to Pima County.

Subsequently, U.S. Rep. Morris K. Udall, who replaced his brother Stewart when he became secretary of the Interior, initiated a bill to have 15,360 acres of the Tucson Mountain Park attached to Saguaro National Monument. Hayden presented the same bill to the Senate. Stewart Udall convinced President John F. Kennedy to transfer part of the park to Saguaro by proclamation.

On Nov. 16, 1961, Kennedy issued a presidential proclamation enlarging Saguaro National Monument and created the Tucson Mountain Unit. On Oct. 14, 1994, President Bill Clinton signed legislation enlarging Saguaro's boundaries, and making Saguaro National Park America's 52nd national park.

Governor might call special session to 'fix' immigration law

With the stroke of her pen, Gov. Janet Napolitano simultaneously gave Arizona the toughest illegal immigration policy in the country and set the stage for changes to be made to the law before it even goes into effect.

Along with her signature, Napolitano also outlined a number of flaws she sees in the bill and in a letter to Senate President Tim Bee and House Speaker Jim Weiers stated that she was "willing to call the Legislature into special session this fall…to fix this bill" before its provisions become effective in January.

"The special session will be aimed at clarifications, omissions and corrections, not at undercutting the strength [of the law]," she wrote.

Public funding stands — for now

Arizona's system of public funding for political campaigns will continue business as usual, unless and until the Arizona Supreme Court rules otherwise.

The Supreme Court issued an indefinite stay of the state Court of Appeals decision that found the major source of funding for the Clean Elections Act — a 10 percent surcharge on all civil and criminal court fines – to be an unconstitutional infringement on free speech rights.

The order does not overturn the Court of Appeals decision, but simply allows the Arizona Citizens Clean Elections Commission to continue to operate as usual until the Supreme Court reviews the case.

New House rule pushes early bill filing

House members will have an incentive to file their bills early next year as members approved a measure that will limit the number of bills that can be introduced after next year's session begins.

After more than a week of meetings, caucuses and hallway debate, House members passed a change in their operating procedures that will cap the number of bills, resolutions and memorials each member can introduce at five once the regular session begins.

The rule allows for an unlimited number of bills to be "prefiled" prior to the session.

The House and Senate adopt separate procedural rules, so the limit affects House members only unless the Senate makes its own revisions.
