Doherty takes final bow for Solano Winds

After 17 seasons as artistic and music director of Solano Winds, Doherty will step down after this weekend's concert

By Saija Maki-Waller
swaller@thereporter.com

For 30 years, Solano Winds has been an institution in Solano County. Ever since, Bill Doherty has been behind the scenes and center stage, bringing the group to life.

His 17th and final season as Artistic and Music Director comes to a close on May 2 in the season's closing concert, "Favorites."

Leading up to the concert, Doherty feels a mix of excitement tinged with a hint of the bittersweet. Before he became music director, he was a founding member and trumpet player. Next season he will start a new chapter as a trumpet player once again.

However, parts of his job he'll miss. Mainly, picking the music for each Solano Winds concert. "Although this concert is, you know, called 'Favorites,' anything we ever play is one of my favorites," he laughs.

The concert will feature nine different pieces, a selection of Doherty's favorite songs from over the years. Some were chosen for their melody, while others for their personal significance, he says.

The second song, "La Belle Hélène Overture" by Jacques Offenbach was selected for the former. "It has this thing where the meters go back and forth, and it's almost like one theme keeps interrupting the other until one of them actually wins out, and it's just done in such an understated and fun way," says Doherty.

A later piece, "Solano Winds Heritage" by local composer Melvin Brito was chosen for its direct ties to Doherty. In addition to being composed by a former student of his, "Solano Winds Heritage" was commissioned by Doherty's wife in 2020 and features melodies from family songs.

"When the piece was premiered a couple years ago it was a very unique experience, because they placed me in the front row of the audience. That is not a place I'm used to being in," he laughs. On May 2, he'll be conducting the piece for the band to play.

With love from the Solano Winds community and a consistent passion for playing, it may be difficult to understand why Doherty would step down. "Like anything else with this, there's no real simple answer," he says.

Part of his decision was because of a desire to leave the role while still in his prime, part of it was wanting to play more in the trumpet section instead of conduct and another part was hoping to spend more time with his three young grandkids, he says.

When asked where he hopes to see Solano Winds grow in the future, Doherty laughed, saying "'Well, my first reaction is 'that's not my job to worry about anymore."

That is the job of the new director, of course, who will be announced at the upcoming concert.

Although their name has not been released, Doherty says "he's a fabulous conductor," with a focus on community. "He wants to kind of come in and really immerse himself in our culture first and kind of see where things go with that," said Doherty.

Overall, Doherty is excited to close out his time as music director, he says. "Obviously you do something for 30 years and it's become a big part of my life, and it's still going to be a big part of my life. This is going to be the next chapter."

The women of 'Andor' see their roles get bigger in Season 2

By Andrew Dalton
The Associated Press

BEVERLY HILLS » Mon Mothma was first introduced to "Star Wars" fans as the rebel leader who appears only long enough to move the plot forward by delivering battle plans in hushed tones.

But in the last moments of the most recent "Andor" episodes on Disney+ (spoilers for already released episodes ahead) she is a patrician senator who, soaked in high-end space booze and potent emotions, tears up the dance floor to a bass-and-drums rave-up at her daughter's wedding. The scene would play as comic if it weren't tragic. None of her fellow revelers know that she has just taken a major step in her rise — or descent — into radicalism by washing her hands of an old friend who may be a threat to the burgeoning Rebel Alliance.

The size of the scene — and its subtleties — shows off the new levels of depth and breadth given to actors Genevieve O'Reilly, Adria Arjona and other central women in the second season of "Andor"; three new episodes drop on Tuesday.

"It's a techno-galactic dance moment, but it's also this moment of internal chaos for this woman," O'Reilly said in an interview with The Associated Press. "She's tacitly agreed to have her friend murdered. She's dancing to stop herself from screaming. It's deeply painful. It is that one moment where we can actually see Mon Mothma wrestle out of this straitjacket and dance with terrified abandon."

Making Mon Mothma into a real character

Mothma's conflict is in some ways even more central to the show's premise — what does it take to make a revolution? — than that of the title character, played by Diego Luna. Like many real-life figures past and present, she is trying to maintain a facade of respectful, and respectable, opposition to tyranny while feeling the pull of open rebellion.

"If she drops that mask of diplomacy, she's useless," O'Reilly said. "She's only effective if she maintains composure."

"Andor" creator Tony Gilroy told the AP that Mothma's "journey is the hardest, I think. Because she has to do everything, and has to be observed. She can't move."

The character originated as a brief-but-memorable role for Caroline Blakiston in 1983's "Return of the Jedi." The 48-year-old Ireland-born O'Reilly, who has lived much of her adult life in Australia, was first cast in the role of the young senator when the 2005 prequel "Revenge of the Sith" was shooting there, because, she says with a laugh, she was the "palest person in Sydney."

All of her "Sith" scenes were relegated to DVD extras. But she would reprise the role in 2016's "Rogue One," to which "Andor" is a prequel, and has played the part in the Lucasfilm properties "Star Wars: Rebels" and "Ahsoka."

But it's in "Andor," especially Season 2, where the origin story of the leader from the planet Chandrila is truly told.

"You really feel that she's of value to this world that is created," O'Reilly said. "That's the gift that every actor wants."

Gilroy wrote the first three episodes of Season 2, and says he insisted on including the elaborate and difficult-to-produce three-day wedding ceremony that ends with the scene set to a chaotic dance-club remix of composer Nicholas Brittel's "Niamos!" from Season 1.

Gilroy says the expanded roles for his show's women came in part from him learning the talents of the performers.

"You get a big show like this where time is really your friend in a way," he said, "and you watch who rises."

Gilroy knew O'Reilly from "Rogue One," which he also wrote, but said she's basically "a piece of furniture" in that movie.

He brought her to "Andor" as a legacy character without giving it much thought. But then he got to see her work.

"It was like, 'My God, look what she can do, she can do anything," Gilroy said. "She's a freaking Steinway. Let's go for it."

Kleya: Stepping out of the shadows in 'Andor' Season 2

He had a similar experience of discovery with Elizabeth Dulau, whose character Kleya had an intriguing but small part in Season 1 as the lieutenant of violent revolutionary Luthen Rael (Stellan Skarsgård).

Saying thanks: 'Chef's Table: Legends' spotlights superstar chefs for the series' tenth anniversary

By Caroline Collacutt
TV Media

After a decade of serving up some of the best culinary content around, the Emmy-nominated docuseries "Chef's Table" has returned for an epic celebratory season. Produced by creator David Gelb's ("Jiro Dreams of Sushi," 2011) Planetarium and Boardwalk Pictures, "Chef's Table: Legends" is now available to stream on Netflix.

According to the streamer, "Legends," the series' eighth season, features a "star-studded lineup whose influence has transcended borders (and mediums) and inspired generations of cooks and food lovers alike," continuing the series' tradition of highlighting one uniquely talented chef per episode.

"They are icons that should need no introduction," explains the "Chef's Table" production team, "and yet we found ourselves alternately surprised and enthralled by the vulnerability, the intimacy and the previously untold stories that they shared with us."

The episodes in question — four in total — are set to delve into the culinary prowess of chefs Jamie Oliver ("The Naked Chef"), José Andrés ("Yes, Chef!"), Thomas Keller ("Fine Food and Film: A Conversation with Brad Bird and Thomas Keller," 2007) and Alice Waters ("Food and Country," 2023). The first and fourth episodes will be directed by Brian McGinn ("Street Food: USA") and Gelb, respectively, with Clay Jeter ("From Scratch") directing episodes 2 and 3, discussing the chefs' styles, specialties and backgrounds.

Fine Dining Lovers — a foodie magazine produced by S. Pellegrino — spoke with Gelb regarding the release of this landmark season, discussing the passion that permeates every episode of "Chef's Table," making itself especially apparent in "Legends."

"We were the first original doc series on the platform," Gelb said, "and it was a gamble. But we believed in this idea that chefs were more than just technicians. They're artists. They're obsessed.

"Anyone with a passion that strong can be inspiring. Even if it's a hot dog vendor outside the Met. It's about what they give up for it. That's the universal theme," he adds.

Since its debut, "Chef's Table" has given a voice to countless culinary masterminds, including chef Christina Tosi, who later in the article explains that the series "offered a way to articulate what Cool Whip containers and childhood memories and unapologetic joy actually mean when translated into a slice of cake."

Gelb concludes by expressing his gratitude to those involved, sharing that the chefs in question are not paid for their on-screen appearances. "They give up their time, open their restaurants, bring in extra staff just so we can light the scene beautifully. But what they give to the episode is what they get back."

Savory, sweet and sentimental, "Chef's Table: Legends" is now available to stream on Netflix.

Vacaville Ballet Company opens 'Mary Poppins,' staged by one of their own

By Saija Maki-Waller
swaller@thereporter.com

What's more satisfying in life than a good full-circle moment? For the Vacaville Ballet Company's Chloe Thornbrugh, that moment will come this weekend in "Mary Poppins."

Thornbrugh danced at Vacaville Ballet Company from the age of 6 until she graduated high school in 2020. There she learned to plié and jeté, at the same time learning valuable life lessons.

"I remember when I was a kid and all of the things my teachers taught me that spoke to me I've carried with me throughout my life, not just related to ballet but related to holding myself and how to treat myself and how to treat others," she says.

Now, she is choreographing and staging her first full-length production, "Mary Poppins," for students at VBC.

"It's been so wonderful to be able to give that back to students in the same way and try to improve on what I learned as a kid," said Thornbrugh, who feels extremely blessed to be able to work with the company's current students.

Throughout the rehearsal process, Thornbrugh has learned a lot about what it takes to put a full-length ballet together and the passion her students have.

"There was a specific group of 5-to-6-year olds that I thought would take two weeks to teach this dance to, but it only took them one day," she says. "I was like, 'wow, they're just so excited to learn this that they just retained everything I gave them instantly."

The main lesson she's learned is to have patience for her students as well as herself, she says. Overall, the production has come together well, in part due to her attachment to the show.

When considering what ballet she wanted to choreograph and stage, "Mary Poppins" was an immediate first choice for Thornbrugh who says: "The music was just so moving and impactful and gave me so many ideas."

Thornbrugh is working with a total of 60 dancers and adult volunteers to play all the roles. Some roles change over the course of the performances, allowing more older dancers to be highlighted in featured roles and to not tire out the very young students.

For Thornbrugh, "Mary Poppins" is further evidence of the positive presence VBC has had in her life since the age of 6, and the company culture plays a large part in that.

"I started as a kid, and I grew up around everybody here, and even though it's not the same people here, there's still the same sense of community and love for all of the students," she says.

"Mary Poppins" opens this Friday with a student matinee, with student tickets priced at $1. Learn more and purchase tickets at vacavilleballetcompany.org

Don Johnson stars in "Doctor Odyssey"

THIS OLD HOUSE

KVIE 7:00 p.m.

Things are moving along at the 19th century Colonial Revival. The roof is on and the fire damage mitigated, so it's time to put on the new siding and use stone on the addition to match the original. Later, the crew visits a trade school in Switzerland.

GHOSTS

KOVR 7:30 p.m.

There are plenty of hurdles to overcome when running a bed and breakfast. However, for Sam (Rose McIver) and Jay (Utkarsh Ambudkar), the problems are far more paranormal than most as their country estate is haunted by countless ghosts.

DOCTOR ODYSSEY

KGO KXTV 9:00 p.m.

The Odyssey is more popular than ever when it seems that a VIP guest room has been double booked. Fortunately, Max (Joshua Jackson) has a prescription ready to calm the nerves while Capt. Massey (Don Johnson) looks to keep the waves at bay.

TV REVIEW

Not even Tom Hardy can save convoluted 'Havoc'

By Mark Meszoros

Tom Hardy stars as a crooked police detective navigating a city's underworld in "Havoc."

Forest Whitaker as Lawrence Beaumont in "Havoc."

English actor Tom Hardy is starring in a new British crime drama series on Showtime/Paramount+, "MobLand," and his unique screen presence is the biggest reason the show rises to a level above middling.

The mumbling. The sly retorts. The measured but terrifying threats of violence if his character does not get the results he's seeking.

It's all just very Tom Hardy in the best way.

On the other hand, his particular set of acting skills is not enough to prop up "Havoc," a disappointing action drama TV movie debuting this week on Netflix.

"Havoc" offers the entirely enticing pairing of Hardy, whose myriad credits also include Christopher Nolan films such as "The Dark Knight Rises" and "Inception," and Welsh writer-director Gareth Evans, who's become a star in the realm of action directing thanks to 2011's "The Raid" and its similarly well-regarded 2014 sequel, "The Raid 2," aka "The Raid: Retaliation."

To be sure, "Havoc" boasts a few sit-up-and-take-notice action sequences. They're inventive. They're stylized. They're uber-violent. They're fun — if, you know, you go for that sort of thing.

They're also not the norm in "Havoc," which relies more heavily on Evans' storytelling and dialogue.

Houston, we have a problem.

That problem is hinted at from the cliched opening narration of Hardy's character Walker, a dirty police detective, in a deliberately unnamed American city. Walker rambles on about the choices you make, how you justify them and how, eventually, you can't justify them and they result in your life being worthless. This is all set over a montage of criminal behavior being conducted by Walker and other cops.

And hey, perhaps all of that would be fine if it were truly setting up the tale told in "Havoc." As it happens, Walker's sins are just a piece of a needlessly complex puzzle. Along with the dirty cops, Evans presents us with a crooked mayoral candidate and his missing estranged son, washing machines containing cocaine, a drug deal going badly, a furious high-ranking member of an Asian drug syndicate and more.

In the press notes for "Havoc," Evans says he came up with the basic idea for the movie while promoting his previous film, the stronger "Apostle," a 2018 Netflix release.

"I said, 'All I want to do is this 100-minute action film,' and all I had at that moment in my head was an image of a cop at a crime scene scooping a mound of cocaine into an empty coffee cup," says Evans. "And that's all I had."

Despite all the moving parts that now comprise "Havoc," he doesn't have much more in any meaningful way.

Watching "Havoc," you are virtually smothered by all the try-hard, from the convoluted plotting of Evans, to the film's overly grimy look courtesy of his longtime director of photography, Matt Flannery, to the overacting of Hardy and the likewise talented Forest Whitaker ("The Last King of Scotland"), who portrays the candidate for mayor, shady real estate mogul Lawrence Beaumont.

Hardy and Whitaker share a scene early on, in which Beaumont coerces Walker into trying to find Beaumont's son, Charlie (Justin Cornwell), who's wanted by the syndicate after the disastrous drug deal. It should be fire, but, despite some yelling, it doesn't even generate much smoke.

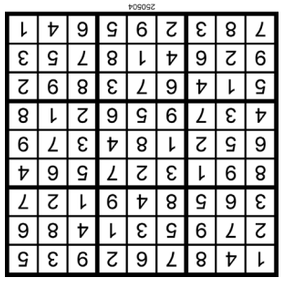

Better work, if only because it's turned down a couple of notches, is offered by Timothy Olyphant ("Deadwood"), as Vincent, one of Walker's partners in police crime, with whom he now finds himself at odds; and Jessie Mei Li ("Shadow and Bone"), as Ellie, a green officer partnered with Walker early in the story whom he keeps at a distance but whose help he quickly will need.

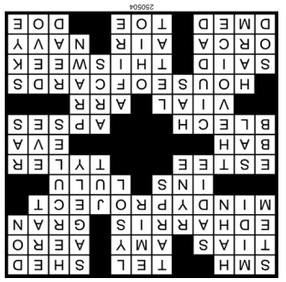

Honestly, it feels as if Li is performing in a different movie — one you may be a little more interested in watching.

Other members of the "Havoc" ensemble include Malaysian actress Yeo Yann Yann, as Mother, the vengeful power player with the crime syndicate, the Triads; Quelin Sepulveda, as Min, Charlie's girlfriend, who's also a target of the Triads and of Vincent; and Luis Guzmán, Mia's uncle Raul, who works to keep her safe. None moves the needle, although veteran actor Guzmán and Hardy share one of the movie's more enjoyable scenes.

Yet that scene and the nifty action sequences are not enough to recommend "Havoc,' even if it's just a few clicks of your smart TV's remote away.

Maybe scroll over to Paramount+ to check out "MobLand," though.
