MOVIE REVIEW

Incendiary ‘One Battle After Another’ is the film of the year

By Katie Walsh
Tribune News Service

Legendary auteur Paul Thomas Anderson has made the film of the year with the incendiary, incisive and frequently quite funny “One Battle After Another,” which just happens to be a searing indictment of this particular moment in American history. Inspired by Thomas Pynchon’s 1990 novel “Vineland” (this is his second Pynchon adaptation, after 2014’s “Inherent Vice”), Anderson transplants the novel’s Reagan-era revolutionary story to present day, loosely utilizing the general narrative and themes, but making it entirely his own. It is a film that is both chillingly prescient and deeply present in this contemporary milieu.

“One Battle After Another” feels like it could be about today, tomorrow or yesterday in America’s timeline, rooted not necessarily in real events but events that feel like they could, or should, be real.

The film opens in an immigration detention camp, as a band of left-wing political militants known as the French 75 infiltrate the facility to liberate the detained, and detain the military overseers. Enchanting rebel leader Perfidia Beverly Hills (Teyana Taylor) locates Col. Stephen Lockjaw (Sean Penn) and relishes sexually humiliating him, something that he also relishes. It’s a dynamic of pleasure and violence that locks the pair into a long-standing exchange of sexual power that will ultimately lead to the dissolution of the French 75, and years of persecution for its members.

Perfidia’s partner

is Pat (Leonardo DiCaprio), aka the Rocket Man, the French 75 explosives guy. She becomes pregnant, and when the baby is born, she beats a hasty retreat from motherhood, having chosen the right father for her child. You can’t say Pat wasn’t warned, as Perfidia’s mother tells him, “she’s a runner and you’re a stump.” No man could match her fiery and foot-loose energy.

Her story, a whirlwind dervish of montage, makes up the first act of the film, in which she runs risky operations while romancing her respective political paramours, betrays her comrades and disappears into thin air, leaving Pat and her baby girl to retreat into witness protection in the Northern California sanctuary city of Bak-tan Cross. Her daughter, renamed Willa (Chase Infiniti), grows into normal teenager who trains in martial arts and wants to hang out with her friends, chafing against the paranoia of her single father, now going by Bob, who won’t allow her to have a cellphone, and passes his time smoking weed in their remote cabin.

Bob’s is not garden-variety parental paranoia, though, because Lockjaw returns, and the French 75 have to knock the rust off their revolutionary skills in order to protect Willa from the maws of state-sanctioned violence that Lockjaw has mobilized in order to pluck the baby bird from her nest. Bob might be a washed-up old stoner, but he earned his stripes for a reason, and he will stop at nothing to save his daughter.

“One Battle After Another” is a tale of epic scope about the many shadowy networks and secretive factions that undergird our society while hiding in plain sight. He introduces not just the French 75, but an underground railroad for Latino immigrants run by Sensei Sergio (Benicio del Toro), a powerful white supremacist secret society, a racist backwoods militia, a convent of cannabis-cultivating nuns, all pulling the strings behind the scenes of American life. But Anderson balances the sprawling, conspiracy-minded aspects of this yarn with the intimate father-daughter story, which is the heart of the matter.

He reflects that blend of epic and intimate in the film’s style, working with cinematographer Michael Bauman. The film was shot on glorious VistaVision, a higher-resolution, widescreen variant of 35mm film, imbued with a thrillingly kinetic sense of movement — the camera follows closely behind our characters as they move swiftly through space, and sweeps over stunning vistas of burning cities and monumental land masses. A climatic car chase is hypnotically rendered, lulling, trancelike before a stunning finale. Even the aerial shots have the jiggle and quiver of a helicopter, not a drone. That something so enormously scaled is clearly handcrafted is deeply moving.

Jonny Greenwood’s score moves between soaring strings and dissonant piano keys, alternately soothing and anxious; a few pieces composed by Jon Brion add an ambient layer of wistfulness.

At the center of it all is DiCaprio as a bumbling dad, clad in an old robe and Solar Shields, and the performance he delivers is a harrowing, harried hoot, playing the hysterical foil to del Toro’s smooth sensei. The two men have different styles but the same goal: to keep their families intact.

“One Battle After Another” isn’t just an explosive revolutionary text but a story of fatherhood — the values we pass down to the next generation, and how we care for them, with love and generosity; with fear, anxiety, a little bit of hope, and above all, a whole lot of faith.

Flower sprinkles galore: Markle makes the mundane magical in Season 2 of 'With Love, Meghan'

By Caroline Colacutt
TV Media

As the series logline claims: “the best moments are made to be shared.” With 2.6 million people tuning in for the debut of this series’ first attention-grabbing series, this former royal has accomplished just that. Now she continues her mission of sharing touching moments and easy-as-pie recipes with people around the globe, as Season 2 of “With Love, Meghan,” is now streaming on Netflix.

Across eight star-studded episodes, Meghan Markle (“Suits”) — known by many as the Duchess of Sussex — draws on years of experience entertaining guests she “[experiments] with bold flavors in the kitchen, and [approaches] doable but delightful DIYs that fill our cups — as well as satisfy our appetites,” per Netflix. All the while, Markle reflects on her life, from her experience working as a model on “Deal or No Deal,” to living as a senior member of the British royal family after marrying Prince Harry.

While arranging flowers, trying her hand at bookbinding, crafting magnificent feasts, celebrating Californian cuisine and sharing kid-friendly recipes and craft ideas in Season 2, Markle is joined by an impressive list of guests, including chefs Jose Andres, David Chang, Samin Nosrat, Christina Tosi, Radhi Devlukia and Clare Smyth — the last of whom crafted Meghan’s wedding menu — and other celebrity friends, such as Pilates Platinum founder Heather Dorak, makeup artist Daniel Martin, “Queer Eye” star Tan France, podcaster Jay Shetty (“On Purpose with Jay Shetty”) and “Cravings” founder Chrissy Teigen — who Markle first met while working on “Deal or No Deal.”

While no announcement has been made regarding a third season of “With Love,” Markle fans will find solace in the certainty that the crafty cook will return with a seasonal special this December, titled “With Love, Meghan: Holiday Celebration.” This special will likely be one of many productions from the Duke and Duchess of Sussex, as their media company, Archewell Productions, has a newly extended multi-year first look deal with Netflix, meaning more shows and movies are certainly on the horizon.

For those who want to bring some of Markle’s magic home, however, you’re in luck. Products seen in “With Love, Meghan,” can now be found as part of Meghan’s lifestyle brand — As ever — which offers the host’s iconic flower sprinkles, teas and baking mixes, all set to change seasonally.

From Archewell Productions and The Intellectual Property Corporation, Season 2 of “With Love, Meghan” is now available to stream on Netflix.

Literary mystery meets dystopian future in ‘What We Can Know’

By Jill Lawless
The Associated Press

LONDON » When novelists look to the future, the view is often grim. There are a lot more fictional dystopias than utopias.

Ian McEwan has good news and bad news about what lies ahead in “What We Can Know,” a book he calls “science fiction without the science.”

The British author’s 19th novel, published Tuesday in the U.S. by Knopf, is set in 2119 and follows a professor of literature researching a famed 21st-century poet and his circle.

So far, so cozy. But it’s a world in which nuclear war, pandemics, economic collapse and climate change — a period known as The Derangement — have halved the global population. The United States is a lawless land of feuding warlords. Nigeria is the global superpower. Inundated England has been reduced to a string of small island republics.

McEwan, 77, said that his working assumption is that humanity will “just scrape through” the next century of crises and catastrophes. The novel seeks “to look at the present through the rather envious eyes of someone in the future.”

Literary mystery

Those eyes belong to Tom Metcalfe, an English academic studying the famous (fictional) poet Francis Blundy, and a legendary lost poem that he read aloud at a dinner party in 2014.

As dystopias go, it’s a gentle one. Tom sifts through reams of 21st-century social media detritus for nuggets of information gold that may lead to the missing poem. He later undertakes an adventurous ous journey with touches of “Treasure Island.”

To Tom, our era is a barely imaginable time of abundance, natural diversity and human folly.

“What brilliant invention and boneheaded greed,” he says.

Readers may hear the author’s voice in the sentiment.

“There is something very reminiscent to me of the ninth century about contemporary life: passionately superstitious, even as we have extraordinary discoveries in biomedicine and in cosmology,” McEwan told The Associated Press. “At one point I describe the process of social media as if some medieval horde had run onto the wrong stage.”

Partway through the book, McEwan delivers a twist that dramatically shifts the reader’s perspective. It’s something he has done before, notably in 2001’s “Atonement” — his bestselling novel, which many consider his best.

The book’s second half delivers surprise, violence, betrayal and — another McEwan trademark — evidence of the “terrible things that perfectly ordinary people can do.”

McEwan said that he wants readers “to be, not disoriented, but just to pass through a different mirror turning the page from part one to part two.

“I hope to bring the reader back to the title.”

Not a climate change novel

McEwan says he’s not an “issues novelist,” although his books often touch on social problems and world affairs: the 2003 invasion of Iraq in “Saturday,” climate change in “Solar,” artificial intelligence in “Machines Like Me.”

In “What We Can Know,” humanity has wreaked havoc on nature. But McEwan says “this isn’t really a novel about climate change.

“The only way to write about climate change is not to,” McEwan said, as the weather outside his London home changed in an instant from sunshine to downpour. “To actually put at the center properly conceived characters and other issues and let the climate change matter simply be there as a given.

“It’s already a given. The last thing I want to do is warn people about it. No one needs any warning about it,” he said. “All that matters is your response to it.”

Upstart to elder statesman

McEwan made his name in the 1970s and ‘80s with unsettling works like “The Cement Garden” and “The Comfort of Strangers.” Today, he’s one of the United Kingdom’s most commercially and critically successful novelists, a five-time Booker Prize finalist who won the prestigious award in 1998 for “Amsterdam.” The Financial Times called him “the centrist dad of English fiction.”

He’s part of a garlanded generation of British writers that includes Martin Amis, Julian Barnes and Salman Rushdie.

“Those writers I met in the early 70s, ‘80s ... became lifelong friends,” he said. “That’s been a delight. And sadness as we all drop off the twig.” His friend Christopher Hitchens died in 2011, Amis in 2023.

McEwan says that he’ll keep writing “till the cogs start falling off,” and claims not to think about his legacy.

“It’s out of my hands,” he said. He recalled decades ago standing in his publisher’s office, lined with shelves of dusty novels from the 1920s and ‘30s.

“And I scanned the shelves for a name I could recognize,” he said. “There were the usual dust jacket quotes: ‘Absolutely brilliant.’ ‘A novelist for our times.’ But forgotten. Just gone.”

Then there’s AI, which he thinks might write “novels of no great originality, but possibly colossal commercial success.”

And yet, he’s optimistic about the future of the novel. The reason comes back to the book’s title.

“We can’t really know the minds of people in the past,” he said. “We can’t even begin to know the minds of people in the future. We barely know the minds properly of people we’re very close to. And that’s at the heart of the paradox of why the novel is not dead: because it gives readers the illusion that they could know.

“Only in the novel can you do it.”

BANANA BALL WORLD TOUR

TRUTV 5:00 p.m.

HALL 8:00 p.m.
When birding enthusiast John (Andrew Walker) needs a partner for a birding competition, he asks Celeste (Rachel Boston), a single mom, to help him out. However, she misunderstands the assignment and tells everyone they’re dating rather than teammates.

SEVEN

HBO 8:00 p.m.

MOVIE REVIEW

'A Big Bold Beautiful Journey' lives up to its title

By Mark Meszoros

mmezoros@news-herald.com

"A Big Bold Beautiful Journey" all but insists you to think back to paths not taken — or, to use its metaphorical framing, doors not opened.

In theaters now, the third feature film from director Kogonada does so artfully, offering a narrative that is, somehow, both high concept and quite simple.

The gracefully told and, at times, surprisingly irreverent "Journey" — penned by "The Menu" writer Seth Reiss — stars Margot Robbie and Colin Farrell as single strangers whom fate seems to be trying to put together.

We first encounter Farrell's David, on the phone talking about going to a wedding alone, assuring that he's quite content with that. When he finds his car, parked on a city street, has a restraining clamp on a wheel, he sees a sign for a car rental agency.

After eventually navigating the business' rather tricky door, he enters a large, mostly open space and walks up to a table manned by a mechanic (Kevin Kline) and a charming-but-F-bomb-dropping cashier (a perfectly cast Phoebe Waller-Bridge of "Fleabag" fame). All they have to offer David is a 1994 Saturn SL, which he takes and, after some more-than-strong encouragement, gets the optional GPS. (You never know when your phone is going to "crap out" on you, they say.)

At the wedding, hundreds of miles down an interstate through extremely heavy (and heavily symbolic) rain, David is introduced to Sarah (Robbie), who lives in the same city as he — but downtown, not on the north side, as he does — and with whom he'd already exchanged glances.

Soon, at the rainy affair, they chat and flirt. She even jokingly asks him to marry her, while he says she shouldn't be afraid of him.

"I'm not afraid of you," Sarah says. "I'm afraid of hurting you."

That comment from the woman who, we learn, also arrived via a Saturn from the mid-1990s equipped with a GPS, will make sense later, when they are in one car, having opted into said navigational system's offer of a "big, bold, beautiful journey."

We will refrain from saying much more about this tale, but know that Sarah and David's guided trek will bring them to doors that serve as portals to their pasts and the choices they've made, which inform the characters and lend insight into why it may not be so easy for them to give in to their obvious mutual attraction.

Hearing the concept of "A Big Bold Beautiful Journey," it would be reasonable to fear the film would be saccharine or syrupy, but Reiss avoids that deftly. We wish he had dug just a little deeper into the pasts of "David From the North Side" and "Downtown Sarah," but he sketches a reasonably full picture of each of them and shows us why they are who they are. His screenplay is impressive in part because it's such a far cry from the aforementioned 2022 black comedy "The Menu," also enjoyable, and, we assume, his comedy-writing work for various "Onion" endeavors and "Late Night With Seth Meyers."

Meanwhile, the work of Kogonada — whose directing credits include the critically adored feature films "Columbus" (2017) and "After Yang" (2021), as well as episodes of the acclaimed series "Pachinko" and the canceled "Star Wars" show

"The Acolyte" — is borderline stunning. He pulls the viewer in with a fluid filmmaking style characterized by myriad exquisitely composed shots, with the help of "After Yang" cinematographer Benjamin Loeb. These visuals are accentuated by the mood-setting score by Japanese composer Joe Hisaishi, known for work on films by anime master Hayao Miyazaki.

Last but not least, there are the film's leads. Following his exceptional, Emmy Award-nominated work on "The Penguin," Farrell reminds us he can be compelling even when not covered by hours of prosthetic and makeup work. Having also starred in "After Yang," the actor gives a multilayered performance that matches the film's aesthetics perfectly.

"Barbie" star Robbie is similarly effective, going just a bit bigger — but not too big — in some emotionally charged scenes that explore Sarah's painful history. Robbie toes a delicate line as Sarah wants to be attractive to David while also pushing him away for both of their sakes.

Don't think twice about going on this "Journey," guided on the screen by a particularly chatty GPS (voiced by another "After Yang" alum, Jodie Turner-Smith) and driven home by a talented filmmaker, a promising writer and gifted performers.
