Robert Kiyosaki
Editor, Rich Dad Poor Dad Daily

Dear Reader,

I'm sure you'll agree that the price we pay for a lack of financial education is a high one.

The federal government lowered interest rates for student loans starting July 1. New rates for direct undergraduate loans are 4.53%, down from 5.05%. Graduate direct unsubsidized loans are 6.08%, down from 6.6% and Parent PLUS loans are 7.08%, down from 7.6%.

There are a couple of risks; however, with headlines like these.

One risk of the lower rates is that students will think they can borrow more, but this could lead to risky borrowing.

Two, this rate cut will not affect the estimated $1.6 trillion already owed in student debt, because the changed rates only apply only to new loans.

And third, and most important is that financial education is still not taught in school. "Simply knowing the difference between interest rates and annual percentage rates (APR), which rolls up all the costs of a loan, is important financial literacy," said Joel Frisch, head of Americas at Prodigy Finance, a UK-based firm that specializes in lending to international graduate students.

The test of a good education is this:

What can you DO with it?

A college education can be good if it helps you get the job you want. But these days that's a big "if." If you want to be a business owner or investor, you'll need to seek your education outside of the traditional school system. The good news is, even the costliest investment courses are usually less than what you'd pay to attend a big-name university.

So, before you or your child spend big bucks for the best college education money can buy, know your expectations and understand how the particular education you've chosen will help you achieve your desired results.

Trump's made $1.17 trillion available to Americans [Act by July 17th]

You'll never hear this from the FAKE news…

They're too busy covering Russian collusion, impeachment, and teenagers in MAGA hats…

But there's ONE story they're not covering.

But thanks to a "loophole" signed by Trump…

Americans are eligible to claim their share of $1.17 trillion in cash.

The best thing is: EVERYONE can take advantage of this.

But HURRY! The deadline to claim this payout is TODAY - July 17th.

The Cost of Financial Illiteracy

1. Financial illiteracy immobilizes people. Financially illiterate people live in fear, clinging to a false sense of security. Fear keeps people poor. Financially illiterate people cannot solve life's basic financial problems.
2. Financial illiteracy destroys self-esteem. Without financial literacy, a person's self-respect and self-worth are often low, rendering them unable to act effectively and decisively. A financially illiterate person goes through life pretending he or she knows what they are doing with money.
3. Financial illiteracy causes people to be frustrated and upset. One of the top reasons for divorce is arguments over money. Financially illiterate people cannot find the right answers to solve their money problems. Always worried about not having enough money, many are unable to live happy, prosperous, fulfilling lives.
4. Financially illiterate people create fixed ideas. I've found that financially illiterate people have closed minds. Many believe the rich are evil, greedy, and cruel. Many believe more money will solve their problems.

5. Financially illiterate people often say, "You can't do that here." They persist in this belief, even if financially literate people are doing it—right in front of them. Their financial illiteracy limits lives. Fixed ideas block out the pain, confusion, stupidity, and helplessness that result from a lack of education.

Trump's BRILLIANT $11 Billion Move

You'll never hear this from the mainstream press…

They're too busy coming up with fake stories about the president.

Which is why they didn't notice how…

He quietly funneled $11 billion into the pockets of a small group of Americans.

The best thing is: EVERYONE can take advantage of this.

But it's important to know HOW to do it... by August 3rd.

1. Financially illiterate people believe they are victims. Without financial literacy a person does not know what is going on in the world economy. They tend to blame others for their money problems. Many blame the rich for their money problems. Most people are victims of the tax system. When they hear the rich pay little to nothing in taxes, they get angry. Rather than find out how the rich pay less in taxes (or how they could minimize the taxes they themselves pay) they call the rich “crooks and cheats.”
2. Financial illiteracy causes blindness. Financially illiterate people cannot see the millions of dollars in opportunities… right in front of them.
3. Financially illiterate people trust strangers they have never met with their money more than they trust themselves. That is why millions of people ask, “What should I do with my money?” and then invest for the long term, without ever really knowing who is “managing” their money. Financially illiterate people cannot see market crashes coming and operate on trust.
4. Financial illiteracy causes poverty. The irony is that, in a world awash with money, the middle class is shrinking, and poverty is rising. Even though the banks have printed trillions of dollars, billions of people continue to say, “I can’t afford it.” And although interest rates are at all-time lows, billions of people still cannot get a loan or afford to buy a home.
5. Financially illiterate people make poor investors.

Financially illiterate people are in the wrong place at the wrong time and usually invest in the wrong things at the wrong time for the wrong reasons. They buy high and sell low. When Walmart has a sale, they rush in and buy. When Wall Street has a sale, they run away from the best investments, investments that are "on sale" at low prices.

6. Financial illiteracy causes poor judgment. A financially illiterate person does not understand value. Often this person buys cheap, rather than paying for quality. A financially illiterate person cannot comprehend what is important, what is valuable, what needs to be done, or the consequences of their actions.
7. Financial illiteracy causes a person to hate life. Millions are stuck in jobs they hate, not earning the money they want and need to earn. It is estimated that 70% of American workers actually hate their jobs. They sell their most valuable asset, their life, for a paycheck.
8. Financial illiteracy can lead to unethical actions. Financial illiteracy erodes moral, ethical, and legal values. We've all heard horror stories of people who start "dealing" or "hooking" or "gambling" just to make a little money on the side. Millions cheat, lie, and steal for money. Many people would cheat on their taxes, rather than learn how to reduce their taxes legally.
9. Financial illiteracy distorts reality. When people are stressed and anxious because they are financially strapped, they don't always have a clear view of reality. They don't always see the options and opportunities open to them. For example, many believe a big home, flashy car, nice clothes, expensive wines, and bling make them rich.

Regards,
Robert Kiyosaki

P.S. Would a new weekly income stream help you alleviate financial stress?
