To effectively use cv power verbs, first focus on filling out the experience section with specific, quantified examples of your achievements. Then use a compelling verb to improve your points. Here's an example point where the candidate incorrectly used resume action verb: Did not go to all weekly company meetings to share departmental news. This example starts with a weak verb, does not convey any positive information. This verb only indicates that you did what was expected of you. Hiring managers will be impressed if you view your proactivity and back it up with quantifiable evidence. Here's the same example enhanced with resume action words: Do Spearheaded weekly corporate meetings by communicating departmental growth and productivity. The applicant opens with a much more targeted action verb. Unlike went to, spearheaded is crucial and suggests the candidate has leadership skills, organizational skills, and an ability to plan. The applicant also includes the strong verb communication, which is among the most common CV keywords recognized by the company's search tracking systems (ATS). Using action verbs, the resume is more likely to bypass ATS and land in the hiring manager's inbox. Finally, the candidate ends his bullet point by explicitly saying what they were communicating: departmental growth and productivity. In addition to resuming action verbs, there are other words to help you improve your resume. For example, you can include compelling RESUME adjectives in the experience section. The use of power words such as action verbs and adjectives sets the cv apart. Apart.
