A STAND-ALONE NOVEL IN THE DIVINE SERIES

Detective Pearl Pines stared down at the body of the mayor's daughter, Samantha Owen. A handprint was burned into the delicate flesh of both her face and neck, and she had suffered a gash to the back of her head. Pearl knew right away it was the work of a Divine.

In Pearl's world, she was just a boring Typic, otherwise known as a "typical" human being. She always wanted to be a Divine. Divines were people who were born with unique super-human abilities, those of which they chose to either expose or conceal while living among the world of Typics. Divines could be powerful, and Pearl wished she were one of them.

Rewinding back to two weeks before Samantha Owen's murder, Pearl meets an attractive fireman, Dillan, but is turned off by his rude behavior. When they meet again, his wall comes down and they both begin to open up to each other; she tells him about her love of Divines and her desire to be one.

Everything seemed to be falling into place for Detective Pines. That was until Samantha Owen was found dead in a creek, and she realized that her new love interest might know something about it.
