Tales from a relationship is a fictional relationship drama based on events I experienced in my real life. Most of what you will find in the series is taken from real life, but some things such as names, dates and locations are changed due to privacy reasons. Some events are also altered to fit a book and keep the story going.

Reviews from earlier released samples:

"So grab onto this one if you want to read about everyday relationships and their problems. This guy's story reads better than most like it. "

"This is a description of a perfectly dysfunctional relationship. A couple fights only to make up in a couple of hours; and just as they make up, their learned and reinforced behavioral patterns kick in and pull them apart again. Even having a daughter, who should be the reason for this couple to grow and find a compromise, is not enough to stop this cycle of self-destructive behavior.

The author states that he started writing this story as a part of self-therapy. This is actually what is so appealing about this book - or the first two chapters of it - that this comes deep from his soul and he found the strengths within himself to put it all out for other people to see. They say that writers have to be depressed in order to write. Well, some start writing in order to overcome the depression. This is such a case."

"And if you don't recognize yourself when you are reading this book, consider yourself lucky."

"I read through the two chapters super fast and was left with a gnawing emptiness and my curiosity was certainly heightened!"
