Working with industry legends like John Lennon, Stevie Wonder, the Grateful Dead, Iggy Pop, and the famous activist and poet John Sinclair, Peter Andrews helped create the Ann Arbor (Michigan) music scene in the 1960s and 1970s. As a band manager, club owner, and concert promoter, Peter presided over Ann Arbor's reign as the midwestern musical capital of the cultural revolution. The Joint Was Jumpin' provides a behind-the-scenes account of the rise and fall of what is arguably one of the most influential and least appreciated music towns in the Midwest, told by the man who helped put it on the map.

Cumulated Index Medicus - As a music promoter in the 1960s and 70s, Andrews lived a wild life. Today, he lives a quiet one in Ann Arbor with his cat Oliver. He was blessed - and cursed - to be a small-town music promoter in Ann Arbor, Michigan. Andrews writes in his new book The Joint was Jumpin': A Promoter's Story, released in August 2018.
