November 1937: wintry Yorkshire weather, sleet and fog. The little streets of industrial Guardsley still struggle under the iron hand of post-Depression Britain. And there's a whiff of war in the air.

Greta Garbo and a weekly seat at the Orient Cinema are not enough for Matthew. His boyish sense of adventure cries out for more colour and excitement than his digs at Agincourt Terrace and his job at the Gasworks provide.

Partly on a whim, partly as a wager entered into in the pub after football one Saturday, he sets out for the Far East, for new experiences: the sort of things that enticed him in his magical picture-book, the National Geographic.

He achieves his goal, but not in ways that he even remotely suspected, for the Japanese move faster through the Indies than anyone thought possible and Matthew is forced to draw on personal resources that he would rather leave undetected.

An exotic tale of love, pragmatism and reluctant bravery, Tram Ride to the Orient is the quintessential tale of the 'hero in spite of himself'.
