I am a ghost writer.

In life, I was a once-respected trial lawyer and former partner in a high-powered legal firm who took to drink and fell down a long way in my career. I washed out of the firm and became an alcoholic after a murder suspect I got acquitted on a technicality went on to kill an entire family. I was a down-and-out guy who had been kicked up by the big boys, the kind of guy who is never part of the student council at school. I was a junkyard dog who had been in the big arenas. I always had to fight the system to get things done right. In addition to my alcohol addiction, I had multiple bicep tattoos, a canine best friend, an irritatingly precocious teenage daughter, and a friendship with a sassy prostitute.

I graduated from Indiana University with the idea of becoming a Supreme Court Justice; but I ended up an alcoholic, suffering from sleep apnea, divorced from my wife, and apathetically settling court-appointed cases for a few bucks.

A survey done with the American Bar Association shows that close to 36 % of all attorneys have problem-drinking issues and more than 25 % suffer from depression.

With Donald Cooperman, I co-founded one of the most powerful law firms in the world--Cooperman, McBride, Matlock, and Mason. My divorced wife worked for Cooperman, Matlock, and Mason after I left the firm.

Cooperman was disfigured with facial burns and functioned as a recluse. Cooperman rarely, if ever, left his office, and most people at the firm never saw him. Cooperman monitored meetings and depositions remotely by cameras. Without the staff's knowledge, Cooperman had the entire office bugged, giving him access to everything that happened.

A stranger brought me a quickie case by one of the victim's sisters that turned out to be related to a major company--The Octopus; that had shady government ties and reprehensible business practices. Ironically, The Octopus was represented by Cooperman.

To combat The Octopus I tried to straighten myself out and rekindle the sparks of my genius; but as the case got more twisted, I ended up fighting for my life as well as my career.

The Octopus, a defense contractor, was one of the largest multi-national conglomerates in the world. Among The Octopus's enterprises were a banking and consumer credit division and a manufacturing division that made computers, phones, tablets, oxycodon, software for hacktivists, ordnance, tanks, fighter jets, and intercontinental ballistic missiles. The Octopus owned 35% of the global military arms market.

I always believed that the law in Amerika was where democracy could ultimately thrive. That the law was the leveling playing field where, if someone was wronged, they could get their day in court and right that wrong.

The truth is that's just not true anymore.
