Childhood is the purest stage of our lives; left to the real life items and utter imagination that occurs in real time. Parents have a way of shielding a child from some harsh realities of life, yet some circumstances cannot be hidden, their glaring effect only felt and registered on the blank script that is a child's mind. I narrate specific occurrences of my childhood and the circumstances surrounding them. A narrative of childhood in rural Africa, of a child who had the privilege of having working parents, at a time when majority were peasant farmers and ordinary village men and women.

A childhood that saw bullying from far yet had near effects; one that is a minimal reflection of the far reaching impact of the protection by authority.

A child grounded on the simple things of Mother Nature, appreciating what is real in her eyes.
