Second day of a boring train journey and the train was slowing down. Looking through the window, a name board painted in black on a yellow base struck in his vision. It read Jolarpetta; he was looking out for quite some time. He felt nostalgic and sat back. The sun was setting in the distant horizon and it gave a picturesque look to the somewhat lonely platform. He leaned forward and kept his head on the iron railing and he felt the pungent smell of rusted iron. The mind was dwelling back to the past- the mind a pendulum moving back and forth, a definition which satisfied him for the time being.

His first assignment was in Tamilnadu and an unmarried youth reaching Jolarpetta Post Office after serving in two other small towns in the State. Let the pendulum do the rest taking us back and forth. It was 1965-1967 period and the handsome Malayalee joins at Jolarpetta Post Office. Colleagues get him an outhouse of a small house ready and life moves on smoothly. Let a mixed boggy of truth and myth open up.

Post Office is two kilometers away from Jolarpetta railway station and the routines picked up. One day while puffing a panama cigarette after lunch she made her appearance and asked briskly- Do I have a lakkott ? a local word standing for a letter- let us address the girl enquiring for letter as SHE. She knows Malayalam little bit and she is enquiring for a letter from her brother who is a BSF Jawan in the North East. He lifted his face and looked at her. Do I have a letter? She repeated the question. Letters will be delivered at the respective address , that is what he wanted to say but said differently. Address? She told the address and he noted her name- Lalitha . While handing over the letter he observed with curiosity the blue vein which is protruding in her forehead. That was the first identity and thereafter the regular enquiries on letters developed into acquaintance. She is the only daughter of Jolarpetta station master and one day she introduced him to her father. A simple Tamil family man. Friendship developed and he was eagerly waiting for her visits and had started liking her presence and conversation. Habitual oscillation of the mind would have started at that period. While he winds up the days work on Saturdays she made it a point to accompany him and there were no dearth for topics to pick up a conversation for both. Time passed on and the friendship was developing further and one day she asked. Who are all there in your house? Father, mother and a brother-he replied. Why are you not getting married? Queries went on and she used to accompany him till Ponnusamy's tea stall and they part way there some times over a cup of tea.

One such day suddenly she said if this goes on like this then people will start commenting on it. What will they say ,he asked. About the cross border love-she coolly replied. Well, let them say, he reacted. Now tell me what is in your mind, tell me honestly she told. Yes, he honestly opened up his mind and told that he likes her and still he remembers the waves of happiness flickered in her eyes.

Time runs so quickly and the consensus of minds was short lived as he opened his father's letter. He is selected for Civil Service and has to reach Dehradun for six month's training. No second thought-While closing and addressing the resignation letter addressed to the Post Master, he heard her voice- Oh Malayalee is there a letter for me.

While waving her at Jolarpetta railway station telling that he is on leave for some days his conscience was murmuring to the self - that a new chapter of treachery is being opened up.

Pulling the chain of memory track,the train whistled and move on.Half a century fritted away in between rhythmic movement of the bogie and his memories.He looked out and watched the black letters written on an yellow base till it blurred and disappeared from his sight.Now he cannot read it but the mind fixed it as JOLARPETTA.
