Last Call is a glimpse into the secret world of Middle East intrigue by an author who has 'been there/done that';

Intelligence agent 'Jack' reaches the heights of pleasure, including sexually, when he is dominated by the senses of danger and fear. This is why he is what he is; not only a spy working in the Middle East, being used as candy to suborn foreign men of intelligence interest, but also a seeker of experienced, mature, forceful men who will dominate him and push him to the edge of sensuality.

On the last night of his assignment to Cyprus, Jack has come to the picturesque Turkish Cypriot harbor castle town of Kyrenia to give himself to Tahir, an in-place asset he has been running. This last act is in fulfillment of what Tahir has been slipping him secrets from the Turkish Cypriot prime minister's office to attain. But at the cafe; Jack is introduced to Tahir's even more compelling and arousing uncle, Fazil, an international arms smuggler of great interest to Jack's government.

In a whirlwind sail around the Mediterranean, Jack and Fazil engage in a cat and mouse game that not only fulfills the sexual fantasies of both, but also brings Jack repeatedly to the fine edge separating supreme pleasure from pain . . . and death . . . and challenges Fazil to choose between safety and his primeval urges.

This is an expanded relaunch of the eXcessica novella by the same title.
