John Roberts who was born in England has been resident in Mauritius since 1994. He is married to a Mauritian and holds dual nationality from Britain and Mauritius. This collection comprises over 190 essays, book and theatre reviews, published from 2012 to 2017 chiefly in his regular column 'And Another Thing' in the Mauritian, Sentinelle, English language magazine Weekly. The collection is now brought together as a reader.

The short pithy essays, set by subject area, explore many aspects of the author's life as a policy consultant moving from country to country and lately settling in Mauritius and the UK.

In Exile, Roberts reflects on the culture of the many countries he has visited with the fresh eye of a comparative outsider, whilst addressing broader, global issues, aspects of life and manners that have caught the author's enquiring eye in his travels.

Exile explores the sentiments of an Englishman abroad coming to terms with new tastes, the treasures he has found and those he has lost and pines for. The whole collection is wide-ranging in the subjects covered and whilst offering mature analysis of current affairs and topical concerns, the style, with its light touch, provides a text accessible to readers of all ages.

The essays are arranged by subject broadly in line with the current syllabus for lower and upper Sixth forms in the Cambridge International AS Level General Paper. But the collection offers an engagingly wide choice of reading for people of all ages.

'the subject matter a source of constant wonderment and delight, each essay a model of writing at its best'; informal, easy to read, and invariably graceful, witty, and elegant.

Jim Bernard

'entertaining, interesting, educational and amusing';
