Profiles in Diversity Journal Announces its Women Worth Watching® in STEM Award Winners for 2021

CLEVELAND, OH, March 19, 2021 – Profiles in Diversity Journal announced today names of the 28 Women Worth Watching in STEM® Award winners for 2021. The winners will be profiled in the magazine's upcoming 2021 spring issue.

Each woman was nominated by a leader or colleague within the organization where she is employed, and selected by Profiles in Diversity Journal based on her contributions, leadership, mentoring, and achievements in the area of science, technology, engineering, or mathematics. This is the third year the magazine has recognized women who have pursued, and excelled in, STEM careers with its Women Worth Watching in STEM Award.

Referred to as a “trailblazer in patient advocacy” by her organization, one of this year’s winners serves as vice president of health innovation strategies at a nonprofit dedicated to enhancing the lives of the 32 million Americans living with life-threatening food allergies. The first female Black vice president of the organization, she also leads its Diversity, Equality, Inclusion, and Access Initiative.

A partner at a leading U.S. law firm, another of this year’s winners is described by her nominator as “a tireless advocate”—both for her patent clients and for the advancement of women in STEM. Innovators worldwide seek out the technical insight, legal and business acumen, and biotechnology expertise of this talented and dedicated PhD.

As has been the case in past years, all of the publication’s 2021 Women Worth Watching in STEM Award winners are truly outstanding.

“Again this year, we are delighted to showcase these extraordinarily talented and high-achieving women in STEM. Many of this year’s awardees have needed to carve out their own path to success in STEM fields, and we are proud to recognize their talents, as well as their determination and hard work. We are also pleased to acknowledge and congratulate the organizations that support them,” says Publisher James R. Rector. “Recognizing and sharing the achievements of more and more women in STEM ensures that other women and girls, who may be wondering whether there is a place for them in STEM, will see their own possibilities in these women’s stories.”

Profiles in Diversity Journal is proud to present the Women Worth Watching in STEM Awards winners for 2021:
