

Introductory Note

The year 1967 marks the bicentennial of the death of Georg Philipp Telemann, who was born on March 14, 1681, in Magdeburg, and died on June 25, 1767, in Hamburg. Telemann was one of the most prolific composers of all times. He wrote in all forms—cantatas, passions, oratorios, operas, chamber music, and instrumental music of all types. During his lifetime he was known throughout Europe as the leading German musician and composer, whereas the fame of the two giants of the late Baroque era, Bach and Handel, hardly went beyond the borders of Saxony and Thuringia and England, respectively.

Psalm 117 was composed in 1758 during Telemann's last creative period. In it he consciously strived for a simpler technique. Although written in a Baroque idiom, its style points already to the classic period. The work is suitable for Epiphany and the Epiphany season, any festive occasion, and particularly in 1967 for concerts and special services in connection with the observance of the 450th anniversary of the Reformation.
