PROGRAM NOTE

Camille Saint-Saëns (Oct. 9, 1835 – Dec. 16, 1921)

Camille Saint-Saëns' third and final symphony is among his most prominent and lasting compositions. The work was commissioned by the Philharmonic Society of London, the same organization who commissioned other notable staples of the classical repertoire as Beethoven's 9th Symphony. Composed and premiered in 1886 in London, it was immediately positively received, with any opposing views only adding to the work's notoriety.

The symphony is dedicated "to the memory of Franz Liszt", a contemporary of Saint-Saëns. The two shared a mutual admiration, often programing and performing each other's works. Liszt died in 1886, the same year as the compositions' creation and premiere. Though he did not hear it performed in its final form, Saint-Saëns did play through a draft of the work for Liszt prior to his death.

At the premiere at London's Saint James's Hall, Saint-Saëns commented on the work's unusual two-movement structure in the program:

"This Symphony, divided into two parts, nevertheless includes practically the traditional four movements: the first, checked in development, serves as an introduction to the adagio, and the scherzo is connected after the same manner with the finale. The composer has thus sought to shun in a certain measure the interminable repetitions which are more and more disappearing from instrumental music."

In this way, the influence of Liszt, along with other notable contemporaries of the time (Berlioz, Franck, and others...) is heard throughout, through both the blurred lines of the overall form, and in the transformation of a signature melody throughout the piece. The resulting composition is heard more as a tone poem, with a "romantic" flair.

Some consider the masterpiece a quasi-self portrait of Saint-Saëns himself. With the inclusion and significant use of organ and piano, we hear the instruments on which he himself was a virtuoso. A passion for logic is present via the composer's unique contrapuntal inventiveness, especially in the final movement.

Sacred music clearly influences this composition through the use of theme and chorales with close ties to church hymns, hinting at his dozens of sacred works composed. In earlier movements, a darkness is present, including the "dies irae" melody, pointing to several close figures in Saint-Saëns' life whom he had recently lost. Finally, a sort of personal "resurrection" is heard after the journey from dark to light meets its sparkling conclusion in the final movement.

Though he lived for a few decades after, his "Organ Symphony" would be his last in the genre. As he put it, "With it I have given all I could give. What I did I could not achieve again." His "finale" suggests a compelling ending to the overall work's musical narrative.

NOTES TO CONDUCTOR

In an effort to make the work as flexible as possible, while protecting Saint-Saëns' specific color choices, accommodations have been made to ensure the work is performable by as few as 6 or as many as 12 percussionists.

If performed by 6 percussionists (the minimum):

- Player 1: Organ (must include pedals)
- Player 2: Crash Cymbal / Marimba 3 (shares inst. with mba. 1)
- Player 3: Bass Drum / Xylophone
- Player 4: Timpani
- Player 5: Marimba 1
- Player 6: Marimba 2

If performed by 12 percussionists (the maximum):

- Player 1: Organ (one hand, treble clef)
- Player 2: Organ (one hand, bass clef)
- Player 3: Organ (one hand, pedal clef)
- Player 4: Crash Cymbal
- Player 5: Bass Drum
- Player 6: Timpani
- Player 7: Xylophone
- Player 8: Marimba 1
- Player 9: Marimba 2
- Player 10: Marimba 3 (shares inst. with mba. 1)
- Player 11: Piano 1
- Player 12: Piano 2

The "organ" part is a necessary component for the performance of this work; it should not be omitted. If a real pipe organ isn't available, it is encouraged that the organ color be synthesized. Should equipment or performer skill level deem it necessary, the organ part can be divided by stave and performed by up to three separate players.

Saint-Saëns did include crash cymbal and bass drum in his original work, though sparsely. As such, xylophone is written with the intent that it, and bass drum, could be performed by one player if needed. Similarly, the third marimba and crash cymbal may be performed by one player if needed. Conversely, first and second marimbas, and timpani will each require dedicated players. To reduce the number of marimba instruments needed to perform this work, the third marimba may be performed on the same instrument as the first marimba.

Two piano parts have been included for their important role in m. 9 to 16. However, should logistical considerations require the exclusion of these parts, cues have been included in the mallet parts to account for this material. Should two pianos be available, but players limited (in number or skill), it is encouraged to have the mallet players perform the piano parts on piano, omitting their written mallet cues. In this case, two performers can play the top two staves of each piano part on the same instrument, while the other two performers can play the bottom two staves on the second instrument. This should allow each performer to play each stave independently without running into or crowding each other on the keyboard.

Efforts have been made to ensure Saint-Saëns' orchestration and stylistic intent is captured. As such, though technically an "arrangement" due to the lowering of the key from the original in C Major to Bb Major, the work should feel very much like an authentic "transcription". Nearly all stylistic markings and note lengths remain unchanged from their original state. It is recommended the conductor and performers study trusted recordings by major professional orchestras, referencing the various stylistic approaches written throughout, as well as string bowings as it may influence the approach to articulation and other musical factors.

The wind section has been carefully orchestrated with a "modern" wind ensemble instrumentation in mind. "Solo" parts (i.e., 'Solo Flutes' & 'Solo Clarinets') are intended to be performed by two players, each a "soloist" on their part (upper and lower) as would be found in the original work. Several other parts are intended for a single player, including Piccolo, Oboe 1, Oboe 2, English Horn, Eb Clarinet, Eb Contralto Clarinet, Alto Saxophone 1, Alto Saxophone 2, Tenor Saxophone, and Baritone Saxophone. Should the orchestration of the performing ensemble include these instruments in greater numbers, adaptations should be considered to maintain the integrity of the orchestration, particularly in phrases of thinner texture or softer dynamic. Some of these specific areas are marked as "one player". All other parts are intended to be balanced equally within their respective sections.

Finally, while a Contralto Clarinet part is included in the score, parts for Contralto Clarinet and Contrabass Clarinet are provided. These parts are exact duplicates of each other, with some varied octave displacement. It is recommended that only one of the two be utilized.
