About the Music

The opera Carmen, written in 1875, exemplifies Bizet's memorable melodies and alluring harmonies.

This arrangement includes four themes:

The Prelude, includes what has been called the “fate motive” which lets us know that the love story will not end happily. Intonation needs to be accurate to convey a dark and foreboding atmosphere.

The Aragonaise, which occurs before Act IV in the opera, means literally a “Dance of Aragon,” a region of Spain. The melody needs to be prominent and expressive, the accompaniment subtle and light.

Carmen sings the well-known Habanera in the first act of the opera. The style is based on Cuban dance music, and its text translates, “Love is a rebellious bird.” Challenges include a great amount of chromaticism, and the shift from D minor to D major.

The Dance Bohème, or Gypsy Dance, opens Act II of the opera but concludes this arrangement. The music should suggest dancing and swirling which accelerates and grows louder as the music progresses. Clarity of fingerings and articulations is critical, especially in the opening piano section, and grace notes should be cleanly before the beat.
