About the Composition

A Temblor is a tremor or earthquake. This composition for the developing concert band represents a temblor in a variety of ways. The music is reminiscent of the disaster movies that seemed to start in the 1970's and have continued to invade the movie theaters ever since.

The opening four 8th note motive is the basis for the entire piece. It appears throughout as both a prominent idea and a supportive idea. It comes in and out of the texture throughout this opening section and reaches a feverish peak at m. 17. The main melody arrives at m. 19 with some contrasting lyricism. Bring out the lush harmonies along the way. The two elements collide at m. 33.

A development section at m. 47 combines all of the previous elements of the composition and acts as a build to a dramatic moment at m. 56. This in turn continues the building of tension until the Maestoso section at m. 61. This is the high point of the piece and should have the most weight and drama of any section. The four 8th note motive returns for a final time at m. 77 to bring the whole piece full circle.
