Thursday 31 December 2009 Traditional New Year Song This song is also sung at midnight in almost every English-speaking country in the world to bring new year. As an extension, its use has also become common at funerals, graduation, and ending up as a farewell or in other situations. The Scottish player of the song can be translated into English literally as the old long ago or more, long ago or days passed. The melody by Robert Burn's Auld Lang Syne poem, which is now universally sung, is a pentatonic Scottish folk tune, probably actually a sprightly dance at a much faster pace. The English composer William Shield (1748–1829) briefly appears to quote the melody at the end of the overture of the rosina opera, which may have been his first recorded use. Burns' claim that he borrowed the melody from Shield is unlikely, but both may have taken it from a joint source, possibly Miller's Wedding or a strathspey called Miller's Daughter. The problem is that the melodies based on the same set of dance steps necessarily have a similar rhythm, and even in the melodic form a superficial similarity can cause a very strong pronounced resemblance to the melody as a whole.
