Funny videos of babies laughing free

Some people are physical with children, and they'll have them laughing in a few seconds. If you're not one of them, and you're kind of embarrassed about what to do with someone else's child, check out this video. It's full of ideas on how to become besties with your nieces and nephews and cousins-once-removed. The first tactic in the video is a skateboard trick, and if you're not a professional skateboarder you shouldn't attempt it with another person's thin child. The rest is golden baby comedy: Tickle the child, then hide. I repeat, pretend you're a giant. Use your giant voice. Put a pillow over your head. Make funny noises as the pillow falls. Make a puppet bite the child's hand. Play peek-a-boo, and look really surprised at the result. I'd set the age range for these stunts in about three months to two years. In other words, any baby or toddler who can stop sleeping long enough to look quizzically at you. Singing and clapping is also never a bad choice. Good luck and enjoy these baby laughs! Five Ways to Make a Baby Laugh | Andrew Schrock Laughter is triggered when we find something humorous. There are three traditional theories about what we find humorous: The theory of gibberish shows that humor arises when logic and intimacy are replaced by things that don't usually go together. Researcher Thomas Veatch says one joke becomes funny when we wait for one result and another happens. When a joke starts, our minds and bodies already predict what's going to happen and how it's going to end. This prediction takes the form of logical thinking interwoven with emotion and influenced by our past experiences and thought processes. When the joke goes in an unexpected direction, our thoughts and feelings suddenly have to change gears. Now we have new feelings, supporting a different line of thought. In other words, we experience two sets of incompatible thoughts and feelings at the same time. We experience this discrepancy between the different parts of the joke as humorous. Superiority theory comes into play when we laugh at jokes that focus on someone else's mistakes, stupidity or misfortune. We feel superior to this person, we experience a certain detachment from the situation and so we are able to laugh at it. The relief theory is the basis for a device filmmakers have used effectively for a long time. In action movies or thrillers where tension is high, the director uses comic relief at the right times. Accumulates tension or anguish as much as possible and then breaks it down slightly with a side comment, allowing the viewer to relieve himself of pent-up emotion, just so the movie can create it again! Similarly, a real story or situation creates tension within us. As we try to deal with two sets of emotions and thoughts, we need a release and laughter is the way to cleanse our system of structured tension I'm sorry, I'm sorry, I'm sorry. (According to Dr. Lisa Rosenberg, humor, particularly dark humor, can help employees cope with stressful situations. The act of producing humor, making a joke, gives us a mental break and increases our objectivity in the face of overwhelming anxiety, he says.) Then we'll find out why we don't all think the same things are funny. Ladies, if you're lucky, you'll hit the jackpot with your important other.
