FRANK FINCH

Never known as much of a golfer, Frank has steadily improved his game in his retirement. His driving and putting are OK, but his wedge game has developed into quite a weapon. His major weakness on the course is the appearance of the Beer Girl and the immediate distraction that goes with it. Frank's been working with a Zen therapist to clear his head of some of his golf demons. That hasn't really been working, but heavy drinking seems to help.

Handicap Index :: 0.0

BILL BRUNO

For years Bill tried to use computer analysis and engineering principles to improve his golf game with very little success. Lately he's discovered practice, and his game shows it. Watch him off the tee - he can be erratic, but he can also be "sneaky long." Likes to overdo the booze on the course. This is Bill's first golf trip with us; he's on probation.

ED DAVIS

Ed was off to a fast start as a great golfer until several unfortunate "beating" incidents (in which spectators were seriously hurt.) Those wayward shots had a devastating psychological effect on Ed, and his game suffered as a result. Years of therapy have helped Ed recover, and he is now able to compete with the best of them. If you're playing with Ed, be ready to yell "Fore!"

STEVE PICKERING

In his youth, Pick was a huge fan of the "Bionic Man" and his amazing strength, speed, and super-human abilities. It occurred to Pick that he might achieve golf stardom through that same approach. Over the years there have been a series of experiments and operations, trying new and improved body parts and inner workings. He really hasn't gotten the golf results he hoped for, but he has rediscovered practice. As a result, Steve will be a fierce competitor out there. He likes to jingle coins in his pocket while you're addressing the ball.

MIKE FISHER

There are many rumors about the money Mickey has won on the golf course.

Although the exact amount is impossible to determine, Mickey has really never had to work a day in his life. If Mick is your playing partner, life is good. But beware of Mick as an opponent, and never accept a wager on the match. His weakness is in his loyalty to weak partners. And he is easily distracted by sudden noises during his downswing.

ANDY GREGOR

Andy came for the first time in Jan 2013, and his invitation back was never in question. He's a winning partner, and he brings good cigars to the party. Look for long drives and a killer short game from Andy. But he's a very sore loser. Our group was banned from one of last year's courses due to some of his antics. We were told that Andy has been in Anger Management for most of 2013, and we're willing to give him another chance.

DENNIS HAMPTON

Dennis had a real shot at a pro golfing career, but the fame, the glory, the wild women, the financial rewards just seemed too superficial to him. He tossed away his golf future and dedicated himself to a medical career. Now in the twilight of his first career, he's looking to recapture past glory. He's spent tens of thousands of dollars on equipment and lessons, and yet it hasn't all come together for him. This year in Orlando could be the turning point he's been working towards. Don't bet against Dennis on the course.

JOHN MIHALEC

John came to us two years ago needing lessons, encouragement, clubs, and shoes (that's another story.) He ended up being a key partner in several matches and having a good time to boot. He chronicled the trip on Facebook, including the infamous Sparticus photo.

We expected John to jump at the chance to return, but the next year he bailed out to China instead. He's back this year, and rumor has it that he's been secretly working out and taking golf lessons.

GEORGE MORRIS

George also has tried the "Bionic Man" approach to improving his game. This year it's the knee getting a complete makeover.

We'll see if it helps. Two "incidents" from last year put George's invitation back this year in question: the Steakhouse fiasco (don't ask), and the damage to the rental house. Who knew he couldn't handle his liquor? Luckily for George he can hit the occasional long ball, and he had some winning chip shots in earlier years. That trumped all the bad stuff.

PAUL O'GORMAN

Paul spent a career swinging a police baton and cracking heads. As a result, he developed a remarkable natural golf swing. Pumping iron in the gym has given him a long ball, but where it goes is anyone's guess. He's a natural competitor and gambler, so don't take the bait when Paul asks you to make a bet on the match. He's also quite a good chef; with a little luck, he might fix us something this week.

JOE WILLIAMS

For years Joe bought every new golf club and gadget that came on the market in pursuit of a golf game. After nearly bankrupting himself in the process, he turned to practice as a last resort. The results have been remarkable. Joe is a fierce competitor and will make a strong playing partner and a tough opponent. He is steady and reliable, although he is still plagued by the occasional "wild one."

MYRON KERSTETTER

Myron is this year's "Mystery Player." He comes to the GHS Golf Trip with rumors swirling about his years on the Hooters Tour. Some say he had more Hooters than golf. Some say he was tossed out due to "behavior problems." In any event, he's been seen on Greenwich and Stamford courses, and he seems to have his game together. Not Hooters quality, but respectable. Watch for his dirty tricks on the green (dropping clubs, coughing during your putts, etc.)
