

Princeton Theological Seminary Admission Policy

Approved by the Admissions Committee on 1/10/2018

As a professional and graduate school related to the Presbyterian Church (USA), our mission is to prepare women and men to serve Jesus Christ in ministries marked by faith, integrity, scholarship, competence, compassion, and joy, equipping them for leadership worldwide in congregations and the larger church, in classrooms and the academy, and in the public arena.¹

Our admission policy is governed by Princeton Theological Seminary's commitment to the Reformed tradition. The Seminary embraces in its life and work a rich racial and ethnic diversity and the breadth of communions represented in the worldwide church.² To this end, we seek to enroll students who wish to respond to God's call within an engaged, residential, diverse Christian community. Princeton Theological Seminary does not discriminate on the basis of race, color, ancestry, sex, age, marital status, national or ethnic origin, sexual orientation, gender identity, or disability in its admission policies and educational programs.³
