Educational and Teaching Resource Lists
“Research Report and Resources for Disentangling Anti-Asian Violence.” The AAPI COVID-19 Project (ACP), March 24, 2021. By Christina Ong and Amy Zhang. ACP is a research project on anti-Asian violence during COVID housed in the Department of Sociology at Harvard University. See annotated bibliography pp.14ff. (academic articles, think pieces, audio/video, etc.).

“#StopAsianHate Educational Resources.” This document is a “non-exhaustive list of resources intended to provide education regarding #StopAsianHate #StopAAPIHate and our continued commitment to be anti-racist…. We are hoping this document makes it easier for anyone to access the resources they need to be well informed.” This document lists educational resources, social media, articles/reports, books, podcasts, videos, etc.

“Teaching Against Racism in the time of COVID-19 Resources.” From University of Illinois Chicago. “We provide this open-ended set of resources that speak to racism and xenophobia in the age of COVID-19, with a focus on discrimination against Asians and Asian Americans. Drawing on these resources, we ultimately hope to craft a syllabus for teaching about this moment and what it can tell us about the histories of race and racism in the U.S., about patterns of immigrant medical scapegoating, about structural and symbolic violence, about nativist movements and the struggles of all immigrants and communities of color.”

“Treating Yellow Peril: Resources to Address Coronavirus Racism.” Resource list from University of Connecticut. “As we continue to track the development of the coronavirus, racial fears and anxieties have become a dominant frame in which people evaluate the concerns over the ongoing COVID-19 coronavirus infection. This page is intended to gather textual and digital resources to provide easy access to material useful for teach-ins, talking points, and classroom teaching.”

“Combating Anti-Asian Racism in the Age of Coronavirus” by Bianca Mabute-Louie, California Faculty Association. Educational Curriculum and Videos for High Schools and Higher Education.
