WASHINGTON, June 28, 2021 /3BL Media/ - GoodWeave International has released its “Best Practice Series to Eliminate Child Labor in Global Supply Chains” as a resource during this International Year for the Elimination of Child Labor. The five-part series explores how companies and nongovernmental organizations can combat child labor in supply chains and sectors where they work, and is based on GoodWeave’s proven model.

“With child labor numbers increasing to 160,000 million in recent years according to a new report by the International Labor Organization and UNICEF, and heightened risk to vulnerable children because of the COVID-19 crisis, sharing this information is more important than ever,” said Nina Smith, CEO of GoodWeave International. “To achieve our mission of stopping child labor permanently we must create partnerships and spur the uptake of our successful model in new sectors and geographies.”

The GoodWeave System is a comprehensive, market-based approach that goes beyond simple prohibition to change cultural norms, protect children and families, and address the root causes of child labor. The series is based on five key components for eliminating child labor, and is informed by GoodWeave's extensive on-the-ground experience over 25+ years.
