“We’re thrilled to give back to communities again this year with our friends at Sheetz” said Amanda Shank, Vice President of Business Development for Ripken Baseball. “We share Sheetz’s commitment to being active in our communities, and these clinics are a fun way to teach life lessons through sport..”

Players can expect to work on fielding, hitting, and throwing with Ripken Baseball instructors. Participants will receive a Sheetz treat, fruit, and a giveaway.

“The families in our communities had a blast last year with Ripken Baseball,” said Nick Ruffner, Public Relations Manager for Sheetz. “Our goal was to turn this community project into an annual initiative, and we’re thrilled to bring the clinics back to kids across six states this spring.”

Parents can preregister for the “Sheetz Community Clinics presented by Ripken Baseball®” by going to RipkenBaseball.com/Sheetz. The exact timing and locations are subject to change. Availability is limited, while supplies last.
