Grants & Financial Assistance for Individuals

Financial challenges often accompany life with a disability. While managing and improving someone’s health condition is the primary focus, there are so many other considerations. For many, the challenge to pay expenses related to medical bills, housing, transportation, assistive technologies and more can be overwhelming. Fortunately, there are a number of ways to help bridge the financial gap between what health insurance will pay and what you actually need to heal, live, and thrive.

Q: Should I use a crowdfunding site such as GoFundMe?

Often there is a network of relatives, friends and neighbors who are eager to help but need an established and trustworthy resource to assist with managing fundraising. Several organizations, such as Help Hope Live, offer a community-based fundraising platform while assisting with tax and asset-based assistance program implications. The money raised can pay for a wide range of expenses including out-of-pocket costs for medications, durable medical equipment, home health care, wheelchair-accessibility modifications, physical therapy, innovative treatments, medical travel and temporary relocation, even emergency living assistance. If you use a fundraising app, please explore the tax and financial ramifications beforehand so that you do not lose any income-based benefits.

Q: How do I pay for outpatient treatments not covered by insurance?

Insurance usually covers both outpatient care and inpatient treatment. However, many insurers limit the number of physical or occupational therapy visits per year. Since coverage options can vary a great deal from one insurance plan to the next, it’s a good idea to work with the treatment center to make sure the full scope of treatment is covered by your policy. Outpatient treatment is a broad term, and some policies may not cover certain programs. Many facilities extend payment plan options to clients who need financial assistance. Money raised through community support can also help cover these costs. Transportation costs can be another consideration if the facility is far from home.

Q: How do I pay for inpatient rehabilitation?

Some people purchase supplemental insurance coverage, commonly referred to as “Medigap” coverage, to fill in where Medicare coverage ends. You can also contact your State Health Insurance Assistance Program (SHIP) office for potential options. A few rehab centers offer scholarships for current patients or alumni. Money raised through community support can also help cover these costs.

Q: How to pay for durable medical equipment (DME)?

Medicare will only provide DME coverage for doctors and suppliers who meet their strict standards. Often, Medicare and supplemental insurance contribute to a portion of the cost and the individual may pay a portion. In addition to the assistance programs offered in every state, both national foundations and local non-profits can assist with either financial support or free, long-term loans. Local equipment loan closets may be able to loan you equipment if you can’t afford to buy it. DME purchases are tax deductible. Talk to a DME supplier or financial advisor about other ways to help manage your payments.

Q: How do I pay for home modifications?

Medicare and most private insurance typically do not pay for home modifications. See if your state’s vocational rehabilitation services will pay for lifts or elevators. If your injury was work-related, workers’ compensation would pay for any medically necessary modifications to your home. If you were the victim of a crime, your state may cover some home modifications from its crime victim compensation fund. You should seek out any equipment loan closets to see if they have stair lifts or temporary ramps. Many states offer disability assistance programs and the U.S. Department of Agriculture offers Rural Repair and Rehabilitation Grants to improve safety and remove health hazards for people living with a disability. Home Depot, Lowe’s and Habitat for Humanity have programs to support community-based home modification initiatives with grants and other resources for homeowners. Renters may need to request that their landlord work with these organizations. Some non-profits, such as Rebuilding Together, offer assistance in the form of financial aid or volunteer labor.

Potential Sources of Financial Assistance:

- Medicare
- Veteran programs (Department of Veterans Affairs)
- State assistance programs (Medicaid, Children’s Health Insurance Programs)
- Private insurance including Affordable Care Act insurers
- National and local non-profit organizations and foundations
- Other options (crowdfunding, reverse mortgage, life settlement, long-term insurance, catastrophic coverage from a credit card, vocational rehabilitation)

Q: Does the Reeve Foundation offer direct financial support to individuals?

Unfortunately, the Reeve Foundation is unable to give financial support to individuals. To best serve the entire paralysis community, the Reeve Foundation focuses on supporting non-profits organizations (rather than individuals) that offer life-changing programs through both local and national resources. Often our funding of these organizations results in the reduction or elimination of program costs for participants to help ease financial burdens and enable individuals to enjoy greater independence and quality of life.
