Problem

My student can't understand what we're reading because of poor vocabulary development.

My students look up words in dictionaries, but they still don't understand the text.

I want to differentiate more, but I don't have time.

I don't have enough good data to help me design effective interventions.

I'm tired of typing vocab lists and quizzes, making copies of assignments, and researching text complexity levels.

I don't have time (or the budget) to order and install software and train my students.

Solved

Copy-paste difficult text passages (or web page URLs) into Rewordify.com. Your student will instantly see a simpler version, for fast comprehension now.

Our Rewordifying Engine explains words with clear, easy-to-understand definitions that make sense in context. Students spend time reading, not looking up words.

Rewordify.com extracts and teaches words from any high-interest text passage. You control the word difficulty, for differentiation by readiness. Students read and learn from what interests them, for differentiation by interest. You can change how the site highlights and teaches words, for differentiation by learning style.

Educator Central shows you student reading time, words learned, and detailed errors made while learning: recognition errors, spelling errors, cloze errors, and more. Sort and filter to help group students by need.

Rewordify.com instantly makes vocabulary lists, quizzes, cloze exercises, and more—with answer keys—from any text block. You can post documents online so your students can read and learn from them anywhere. Plus, you get valid, reliable text complexity measures for each block of text.
