A common misconception about becoming a Christian that exists in our world today is that when one chooses to become a Christian, they have completed the exercise necessary to enter heaven. What many fail to realize is that when one chooses to become a Christian, they are opening the door to a new life with new expectations, new desires, and a new vocation. Thus, the growing movement of coming to Jesus "as you are and He won't ask you to change" is sinful, misleading, and condemnable. Jesus, with the authority given Him by God the Father, demands a change fitting of the recognition that took place when a person realizes their need for salvation.

Today we continue our series looking at the revolutionary nature of the cross of Jesus Christ. Last week we gave thought to the joy we are able to hold in the death of Christ, the mental image of the cross that we should carry with us, and the simple truth that the love of God is seen in the death of Jesus. This morning, we examine what it actually means for us and our lives when we enter into a covenant relationship with God. That covenant demands of us that we have a new aim and a new vocation. Please join in with our study and consider your relationship with God today.
