3. Would you (support or oppose) a national Medicare for All plan after hearing these two arguments: Some say it would require 180 million Americans to move from private insurance to the Medicare for All plan. Others say that people don't actually love their insurance companies, they love their doctors. And under Medicare for All you would always have health care, even if you are fired or switch jobs – and you would be able to go to any doctor you want. Hearing these two arguments, would you (support or oppose) Medicare for All?

5. Would you (support or oppose) a national Medicare for All plan after hearing these two arguments: Some say it would require most Americans to pay more in taxes. Others say that while taxes would technically go up under Medicare for All, Americans would pay no private insurance premiums, co-pays, or deductibles. Instead, you would pay a premium to the government that is less than what you pay for healthcare now, and you would wind up with more money in your pocket overall. Hearing these two arguments, would you (support or oppose) Medicare for All?

This survey is based on 1,009 interviews conducted by YouGov on the internet of self-identified registered voters. The sample was weighted according to gender, age, race, education, Census region, and 2016 Presidential vote choice. Respondents were selected from YouGov's panel to be representative of registered voters. The weights range from 0.2 to 4.8 with a mean of 1 and a standard deviation of 0.5.

The margin of error (a 95% confidence interval) for a sample percentage p based upon the entire sample is approximately 3.5%. It is calculated using the formula where CV is the coefficient of variation of the sample weights and n is the sample size used to compute the proportion. This is a measure of sampling error (the average of all estimates obtained using the same sample selection and weighting procedures repeatedly). The sample estimate should differ from its expected value by less than margin of error in 95 percent of all samples. It does not reflect non-sampling errors, including potential selection bias in panel participation or in response to a particular survey.

$$\hat{p} \pm 100 \times \sqrt{\frac{1 + CV^2}{n}}$$
