On 11/21/14 I received a call from Scott Greenfield, representing himself as a well-known blogger. He stated that he was serving as intermediary between another blogger and a law suit I was (and am) pursuing in Queens Supreme Court against Zoltan Boka, a private citizen. My complaint about Boka was his unfair characterization of my lawyerly skills in arguing an Art. 78 appeal (reinstatement into the CUNY Graduate Program.)

Anyway, Greenfield warned me off from pursuing that cause lest I become victim of some kind of cyber attack by "hundreds" of individuals bent on maintaining the internet "free". My defamation case against Boka for what he wrote on "yelp", he said, would cause a major uproar among those guardians of "internet freedom". He added that he was only conveying the message, not anything else.

In the course of time I have subpoenaed both Boka and Greenfield, but they have attempted to avoid that step of my inquiry. It should be known that Greenfield's call came two days after Boka was served with summons and complaint. The issue at hand is that Greenfield did not denounce those supposed extortion to the police, attorney general, or any other legal authority.

→ Indeed, I question whether Greenfield even talked to his illusory "blogger". Does he not fall under DR 1-103 (2009.47) "Disc. by Inv. to Authorities"??
