A LITTLE RECORD.

At a railroad station, last night, the conductor stood waiting for the train that was to leave at 7.00 o'clock. The crowd of passengers, with the light of the street lamps upon them, was waiting in the same way, and the conductor, with a smile, said to the man beside him, "Are you going to take the train, or are you going to wait for an hour longer?" "I am going to take the train," said the man, "and I have been waiting for an hour longer."

THE CHURCH OF THE PAST.

In the 18th century, there was a great deal of excitement in the church. The churches were filled with people, and the sermons were full of excitement. The preachers were very popular, and the people loved them. The churches were very beautiful, and the organs were very loud. The people were very happy, and they loved to hear the music.

THE CHURCH OF THE PRESENT.

In the 19th century, there was a great deal of excitement in the church. The churches were filled with people, and the sermons were full of excitement. The preachers were very popular, and the people loved them. The churches were very beautiful, and the organs were very loud. The people were very happy, and they loved to hear the music.

THE CHURCH OF THE FUTURE.

In the 20th century, there will be a great deal of excitement in the church. The churches will be filled with people, and the sermons will be full of excitement. The preachers will be very popular, and the people will love them. The churches will be very beautiful, and the organs will be very loud. The people will be very happy, and they will love to hear the music.
