WASHINGTON LETTER.

A NOTE OF VISIT OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Mr. Lincoln, as we have said in our last letter, was on his way to the capital, on the 1st of March, to attend the opening of Congress. He arrived in Washington on the 3rd of March, and on the 4th of March, was installed in the Senate chamber, and took his seat. He was received with great kindness and respect by the Senate, and was greeted with enthusiasm by the people of the city.

The President was in a state of great excitement, and expressed his joy at being in Washington, and his desire to do his best for the country. He was warmly congratulated by the members of the Senate, and was received with acclamations of praise.

The President's speech was delivered in the Senate chamber, and was of great interest and importance. He spoke of the great work which had been done by the government, and of the need of the country for the leaders of the party to continue to support the government in its efforts to advance the interests of the nation.

The President's speech was received with great enthusiasm, and he was greeted with great applause. The members of the Senate were unanimous in their praise of the President, and the people of the city were greatly pleased with his speech.

Washington, March 4, 1865.

W. W. Sharpe.

The President was in a state of great excitement, and expressed his joy at being in Washington, and his desire to do his best for the country. He was warmly congratulated by the members of the Senate, and was greeted with acclamations of praise.

The President's speech was delivered in the Senate chamber, and was of great interest and importance. He spoke of the great work which had been done by the government, and of the need of the country for the leaders of the party to continue to support the government in its efforts to advance the interests of the nation.

The President's speech was received with great enthusiasm, and he was greeted with great applause. The members of the Senate were unanimous in their praise of the President, and the people of the city were greatly pleased with his speech.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

A NOTE OF VISIT OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Mr. Lincoln, as we have said in our last letter, was on his way to the capital, on the 1st of March, to attend the opening of Congress. He arrived in Washington on the 3rd of March, and on the 4th of March, was installed in the Senate chamber, and took his seat. He was received with great kindness and respect by the Senate, and was greeted with enthusiasm by the people of the city.

The President was in a state of great excitement, and expressed his joy at being in Washington, and his desire to do his best for the country. He was warmly congratulated by the members of the Senate, and was greeted with acclamations of praise.

The President's speech was delivered in the Senate chamber, and was of great interest and importance. He spoke of the great work which had been done by the government, and of the need of the country for the leaders of the party to continue to support the government in its efforts to advance the interests of the nation.

The President's speech was received with great enthusiasm, and he was greeted with great applause. The members of the Senate were unanimous in their praise of the President, and the people of the city were greatly pleased with his speech.

Washington, March 4, 1865.

W. W. Sharpe.